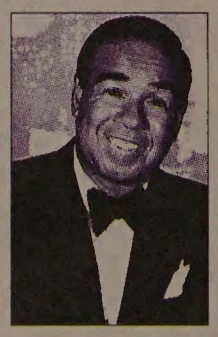
CITY HAUL

Smoke Up, Bud

We Bostonians should take great pride in our smokeful city—and laugh uproariously at the surfer slackers and silicone bimbettes in California who have to leave the bar to light up. And to rub it in their tanned faces, we have the opening of The Boston Cigar Factory on January 15 at 186 Lincoln St. Marcia Weaver, whose line of hand-rolled Boston Cigar Factory Cigars are sold at the concierge desk at South Station, is opening the doors of the new factory to the public on Thursday and Friday nights as a Cuban Cafe. Catered by Mucho Gusto, the cafe will serve Cuban coffees, pastries and light fare—with a smoking lounge and cigar rolling—to the caliente backdrop of palm trees and Cuban music. The Cuban Cafe and Boston Cigar Factory will be open from 4 pm into the wee hours of the morning.



Watch This Space

The newest draw on the South End arts scene is Space 12, a gallery/performance venue open since September at 12 Union Park St. With space galore, a darkroom and a menu of events running from wine tastings and screenings to energetic mixed-means collaboration, this common ground for artists and audience to mingle is luring equally varied crowds to its openings. The brainchild of video artists Greg Shea and Sandy Larson, who aim to jumpstart a latcly dormant scene with unconventional offerings, Space 12 currently features metal sculpture by Nicole Peskin, large scale acrylics by Shane Murray and photography by Liz Linder. A joint program by Linder and dancer Christine Bennett is set for January 31, with works by eclectic artist Paul Richard to follow in February. Shea and Larson's contagious enthusiasm for edgy happenings should make for an interesting season. Gallery hours: Tues. & Thurs. 12-2 pm, Sat. & Sun. 1-5 pm. — Mimi Hirsh

The Short Of It

Direct from the Cafe Carlyle, brought to you by those who abhor the winter doldrums, comes legendary piano man Bobby Short, on his annual and all-too-short stint in Boston. The master of Cole Porteresque cabaret, Short will be at Scullers Jazz Club at the DoubleTree Guest Suites Hotel at 400 Soldiers Field Rd. from January 29-31. Call 562-4111 for details.

PICK OF THE LITTER

FLYRABBIT (weird novelties): The Pin-up: A Modest History by Mark Gabor ($22)

BACK BAY HARLEY-DAVIDSON: All 95th Anniversary (1998) memorabilia (jackets, lighters, vests, sweatshirts, etc.)

MARQUIS DE SADE (sex toys): The Inflatable Jumbo Dildo. ($64.95); San Francisco Cowboy Leather Billy (a gay version of Barbie) ($49.95)

CITY SPORTS: Nike Dry Fit (running) tights ($45-75); Columbia fleece jackets ($60-130)

CRATE & BARREL: Essex and Bel-Air martini glasses ($6.95-7.95 each); gold mesh basket with paper white narcissus bulbs ($7.95)

SHARPER IMAGE: Lunker Bass (handheld fishing game) ($30)

FAO SCHWARZ: Sing 'N Snore Ernie $39.99; Laser Challenge (laser tag game) ($70-150)

TIFFANY & CO.: Classic Tiffany Solitaire Engagement Ring ($850 and up)

URBAN OUTFITTERS: Royal blue inflatable chair ($55)

As last fall's failures go into "hiatus," be on the lookout for new series. Add to the list ABC's Prey (Thursday, Jan. 15, 8 pm, Channel 5) about a bio-anthropologist (Debra Messing) who searches out a new killer species of humans. Meanwhile, on ER (Thursday, Jan. 15, 10 pm, Channel 7) Hathaway (Julianna Margulies) has a surprise for Dr. Ross (George Clooney), hmmmm.... Nash Bridges (Friday, Jan. 16, 10 pm, Channel 4) has one of those greatest-hits-flashback episodes, emceed by Mr. Journalism himself, Geraldo Rivera. Also features a cameo by San Francisco mayor Willie Brown.

FOR THE PATRIOTS FAN/CLOSET MASOCHIST: Break out the dip—Super Bowl XXXII, this time in San Diego, broadcasts on NBC Sunday, Jan. 25. The Patriots won't be making the flight this time, but you can relive the highlights of their 1986 ass-kicking at the hands of the Chicago Bears on ESPN2 (Friday, Jan. 16, 2:30 pm).

WILL THIS AFFECT MY 401(K)?: 1993's Barbarians at the Gate (Friday, Jan. 16, 8 pm and 11 pm, CNBC) is a made-for-cable satirical look at real-life, bull market merger-mania. Based on the best-seller in which RJR Nabisco CEO R. Ross Johnson (James Garner), trying to hide his own failures, attempts to buy the company but is challenged by leveraged-buy-out legend Henry Kravis.

AM I PATTY OR AM I CATHY?: Doing a sitcom about "twin cousins" couldn't have helped, but talented child and adult actress Patty Duke led a life plagued with self-destructive behavior until finally being diagnosed with and treated for manic depression. She chronicled her story in an autobiography and starred in the 1990 made-for-TV movie adaptation Call Me Anna (her birth name). On Lifetime, Friday, Jan. 16, 9 pm.

THESE DAYS, YOU COULD SUE FOR EMOTIONAL ABUSE: Before L.A. Law, there was The Paper Chase (Saturday, Jan. 17, 9:50 pm, Channel 2). This 1973 movie, filmed in and around Cambridge, chronicles the life of Harvard law students and their lovable but sadistic professor, played by John Houseman.

Beauty & TRUTH

Julie Michaud, Boston's beauty upstart.

MICHAUD, MA BELLE

They're fixing the damn Artery—even the zoo is getting an overhaul. Isn't it time Boston had a groovy salon for first-class makeovers and make-up?

Gripe no longer, my little chickadee: Julie Michaud, a commercial make-up artist famous among Beantown models and photographers for her subtle, natural application of cosmetics, has created a make-up line that reflects what babes want in their war paint. Whether you're a high-maintenance glamour junkie or a part-time primper, you'll get hooked on the quality of Julie's line—and the tips that come with the colors.

Michaud's foundations are top notch, ranging in coverage from sheer to supreme while never looking obvious. Her loose powder is so finely ground, it'll leave your face flawlessly finished, without looking overdone.

Her collection includes matte lipsticks that go on smooth and won't dry out your kisser, eyeshadows that stay where you put them and a fine selection of products for pulling off slick beauty tricks. Michaud's Lip Primer stops feathering and lipstick bleeding. Her Shadow Primer makes dark eyelids appear paler and helps your eyeshadow adhere—best of all, it's completely creaseproof.

Michaud is tucked into the backside of Solus salon on the third floor of 115 Newbury St. Walk in, or call 236-1115 to make an appointment for a consultation and a tour of her line. ✦

E.T. PHONE HOME

Relief is in sight for molting mouths, cracked kissers and peeling puckers.

Earth Therapeutics is a hippie-dippie company with a scrumptious line of skin care goodies any flowerchild's granddaughter would be proud to own. Testers whose jobs call for latex gloves love E.T.'s Gardener's Hand Repair. For well-protected paws, slather on this lotion before slipping into the rubber restraints. Even after a scrub of the kitchen floor, your hands will be Cinderella-smooth. Testers with mild eczema found relief from their skanky scaling thanks to this mildly-scented skin slime. Hand Repair goes on smooth and never feels greasy. For $7.99, you get six flowing ounces that have never been tested on cute lil' bunnies.

Earth Therapeutics' tea tree oil-based foot care line gets the happy heeler award from our testing crew. Hunka-chunka he-men can bring their booties in from the porch: E.T.'s quick-drying Liquid Foot Powder erases sock stench, leaving your wingtips fresh as a winter morning.

I'm loving their multipurpose Fire & Ice Full Coverage Herbal Beauty Mask these days. Chill this Phantom of the Garden face cover in the fridge, then Velcro it over your eyes to reduce hangover puffiness left by last night's bender with the highway crew. Heated in the microwave, or under hot tap water, it soothes irritated sinuses. Or turn your facial moisturizer into a deep-penetrating moisture mask—slather a good layer of lotion onto your face, then strap on a warmed-up Gel Mask. Relax for 10 minutes, then remove and enjoy your newly supple skin. This herbal Lone Ranger number costs a whopping 25 smackers, but with proper care it'll last for years. Plus it's great for scaring those pesky kids who keep ringing your doorbell.

Bread and Circus stores carry some of this line, and there's been an ET sighting at Marshall's. Call Earth Therapeutics at (800)789-3579 for other locations near you. ✦

CHAPPED LIPS SINK SHIPS

Smart sailors know that their dockside dollies appreciate kisses from lips as smooth as summer seas. Before you plant that anchor, matey, make sure your pucker is shipshape!

First step: throw those mentholated lip treatments out the porthole. Balms like Blistex or Carmex tingle and feel like they're working, but these ointments are actually drying your lips even more, so you feel you have to slather on extra products, which dries your kisser further, creating a co-dependent relationship with what I call peppermint lip crack. Read the label: if you see ingredients like camphor, clove oil, wintergreen, rosemary or menthol, avoid it like the scurvy.

Also stay away from harsh, AHA-containing lip treatments that claim to exfoliate dried-up lip scum. Instead, use your toothbrush, a damp face cloth or the Body Shop's Lipscuff to remove flaking flesh.

Guerlain's Lip Balm (available at high-class department stores) is the champion choice for deckhands who shun the prissy, Back Street Boys shine of glossy lip lotions. Mixed from beeswax, sweet almond oil and a nip of Bordeaux wine, it's great for people who are allergic to the petrolatum found in most lip ointments. Breastfeeding moms with cracked nipples find it soothing, as do noses chapped from over-blowing. I call this gentle soother a lip cure—and at $18 for a mere 1/2 oz—it better be.

Testers who took Kiehl's Lip Balm #1 and Elizabeth Arden's Eight Hour Cream for a cruise were more than jolly when they got back to port. Both products protect against further chapping and instantly cure windburned skier's sore smackers. Kiehls' also makes a lipbalm for babies, which is ideal for super-sensitive pouts.

Mast monkeys on a budget should reach for the Body Shop and Bath and Body selection of balms, or Chapstick and Vaseline for simple upkeep. See you under the boardwalk! ✦

This hippie-dip herbal line does more than spare bunnies—it actually works.

Proper BOSTONIANS

FOURTEENTH ANNUAL COMPANY CHRISTMAS AT POPS: The Boston Pops Orchestra, with Keith Lockhart conducting, held its annual fundraiser for the Boston Symphony on December 17 at Symphony Hall. Patrick Purcell, chairman of the event, presented guests with a cocktail reception and a gourmet picnic supper followed by the holiday concert.

THE SIXTH ANNIVERSARY WINTER BANQUET: Cardinal Bernard Law hosted this annual fundraiser for the Affordable Housing Program Planning Office for Urban Affairs, Inc. on December 19 at the Back Bay Ballroom at the Sheraton Boston Hotel. The party was chaired by Marshall N. Carter, chief executive officer of State Street Corporation, to honor Daniel J. Fuss, executive vice president and managing partner of Loomis Sayles & Company L.P., with the Archdiocesan Housing Award. The black tie gala was kicked off by a cocktail reception and dinner in the Boylston Park Cafe.

MOVIES

Human-Scale Heroism

By Betsy Sherman

Welcome to Sarajevo—not your typical war-reporter flick

A SLICE OF LIFE IN 1992 SARAJEVO. A group of women rev up enough generator power to get their hair done in preparation for a wedding. Their proud strut down the street on the way to the church is interrupted, mortally, by sniper fire.

As our view of the scene changes from 35mm film to videotape we switch to the point of view of foreign correspondents covering the war—and commenting on the carnage from relative safety. One of the reporters risks his life to help a priest carry a victim inside a church. But the movie isn't about him—it's about the fellow reporter who looks upon the showoff with distaste.

Michael Winterbottom's powerful Welcome to Sarajevo is a refreshing departure from the standard war-reporter yarn. Its kinetic mix of archival footage with a fictional story isn't unique, but is particularly adroit and energized. Its emphasis on what unites Sarajevo with other cosmopolitan European capitals rather than what divides it from them is provocative. And its portrait of a protagonist who takes human-scale steps toward an act of heroism avoids the cliche of the larger-than-life scribe. On the latter count, the casting of the talented stage actor Stephen Dillane—not a familiar movie face—as correspondent Michael Henderson adds enormously to the credibility of the action.

This British production is loosely based on the true story of a reporter who adopted a Bosnian girl and brought her to safety in England. Before this storyline emerges, Winterbottom (whose previous features were Butterfly Kiss and Jude) creates a mosaic out of scenes of the foreign reporters at work and at play, glimpses of Sarajevans coping with the assaults on their lives by Bosnian Serb guerillas and sardonic montages of world leaders waffling over whether to intervene in the former Yugoslavia. The film's signature bite of gallows humor is when the spokesman for the UN peacekeepers tells reporters that there are 13 places in the world worse off than Bosnia. American hotshot reporter Flynn, played by Woody Harrelson, wonders aloud whether their beat is moving up or down the list.

Welcome to Sarajevo conveys the genuine concern of the reporters—even Flynn—for their subjects, and their frustration when their heart-breaking footage is bumped by the network folks back home for items such as the separation of Andrew and Fergie. Henderson finds new energy championing the plight of an orphanage on the frontline. He feels sure he can stir viewers' compassion with the series: He vows, "Every night, different child, same message: 'Get me out of here.'" At the orphanage, through his driver/translator, he makes a promise to nine-year-old Emira that he'll get her out of the war zone.

Henderson meant his statement in general terms, but when his return to England coincides with the evacuation of some of the orphanage's babies to Italy (by an aid worker played by Marisa Tomei), he responds to Emira's entreaty with a declaration that he will take her to England. He and Emira ride with the peacekeeper-escorted busload of orphans through the perilous landscape. Emira has a maternal attachment to a baby whom she calls Roadrunner; the rupture of this bond becomes one of the film's most terrifying sequences.

A quick montage of home movies shows Emira's integration into the comfortable rituals of birthday parties and classroom lessons as a charmed passage from a traumatic to a normal childhood. In order to keep Emira in this world, Henderson has to make another trip to Sarajevo to cement his commitment to the adoption.

Winterbottom, writer Frank Cottrell Boyce and editor Trevor Waite keep the film's focus simple, sharp and unsentimental. It's a weighty film that feels light—choice cuts of pop songs and classical music stir a range of emotions. The performances are superb, ranging from Dillane and Kerry Fox's recession into their journalist characters to Harrelson's double-sided Flynn, a wiseass who is as committed as the rest of them to telling Sarajevo's stories. ✦

AD HOC

Cross Purposes

By Tom Weisend

Blue Cross takes a risk and goes too far

IF THERE WERE AWARDS FOR CREEPY advertising, we'd already have a winner so early in the year: Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Massachusetts returned to the TV airwaves with the most unsettling ad of the season. It appears that Blue Cross has met Blue Velvet.

On the one hand, it's a brave move by a company that needs to show a little courage. After being buffeted by record losses, Blue Cross posted some cautiously favorable earnings in the past six months. By the same token, the reassuring and plain-talking approach that Blue Cross took in newspapers and radio earlier this year has been tossed, which is confusing for consumers because this new spot marks Blue Cross' third change in advertising direction since last year.

Blue Cross prooves unsettling.

This is a 180 for Blue Cross. It changed ad agencies in the fall, ending its nine-year relationship with Arnold Communications in favor of the city's upstart agency of the year, Holland Mark Martin Edmund. Known for shaking things up for The Boston Globe and USTrust, HMME has not failed to provide some turbulence for Blue Cross.

Healthcare isn't always pretty and the same holds true for this Blue Cross ad. The colors are overly saturated for effect, the images are shot out of proportion and the ad agency has found the ugliest hospital (is that redundant?) in the world to shoot it at. It looks like a Chernobyl facility shortly after the accident.

Basically, we see two people sitting side by side huddling in a fluorescent wasteland of a hospital waiting room against a strange backdrop of a forest scene painted on the wall. Their tension is communicated by her single tear streaming down her face and his sweat-soaked shirt and grim expression. There's even a shot of the air conditioning duct in the hideous drop ceiling. This is not a happy place.

The copy tells us that while there are many times we have to be concerned about medical issues, we should never be concerned about our healthcare plan. This message is delivered with spooky music that sounds like it was composed by Philip Glass in a deep depression.

The ad is fascinating to look at, but it leaves me colder than the air in January. The not-so-complex message seems to be that when catastrophe strikes, a Blue Cross health plan will be right there with you. Worry about your sick loved one or stricken self and not your insurance. This is a pretty typical healthcare advertising message—competitors from Fallon Health Care to Cigna have similar pitches, albeit with vastly different executions of the message.

The Blue Cross commercial goes awry because it gets too arty and weird for its own good. It makes its pedestrian point in the first few seconds, and then seems to have nowhere to go, so it attempts to gloss over the plainness of its point with distracting and disturbing-yet-hip images. Unless it's trying to give us clues that these people are concerned about a family member with legionnaire's disease, why the shot of the air conditioning vent for heaven's sake? While I applaud the dearth of sentimentality that can sometimes overcrowd healthcare messages, this seems to lose its focus in a self-conscious attempt to avoid any hint of those cheery clichés.

Blue Cross and HMME took a risk here and very nearly pulled off a coup. But the ad fails because it says too little after promising a big payoff. It's a rare disappointment from the agency, and an expensive error for the insurer. ✦

Holly Cole: She got the bug at Berklee.

MUSIC

Sultry Chanteuse

By Paul Robicheau

Toronto's Holly Cole returns to Boston to rock the Paradise

MOST TOURING MUSICIANS AVOID Boston in January weather. But when you come from Canada like Toronto-based singer Holly Cole, that's not an issue. "I'm excited to come to Boston 'cause I've got so much history there," says Cole, who plays the Paradise Jan. 23. "It's the place that influenced me to become a musician."

That turning point came when Cole was 16, visiting a brother who was studying jazz piano at Berklee. They hailed from a musical family in Nova Scotia, their parents both classically trained on piano, which Holly also played from age three. A grandfather taught her country tunes on accordion. Then came '60s pop, from Joni to Jimi. But Berklee changed all that.

"It was jazz I guess that inspired me to become a singer," says Cole, 34, whose love for saxophonist Eric Dolphy led to a passion for vocalists like Betty Carter, Sarah Vaughan and Billie Holiday. "I got the bug, and hung out [at Berklee]. I would sit in with people's ensembles. I wasn't supposed to be there—I was just the sister of someone going there, but he would sneak me in."

Now the sultry chanteuse is trying another scene in Boston. After playing jazz rooms like Scullers, Cole is playing the Paradise Rock Club, has added guitar and drums to her band and leads off her latest CD Dark, Dear Heart with a Beatles cover.

"It's not that I've so much changed or anything, as much as this album is just a different facet of who I am, and who I've always been," Cole says. Her version of "I've Just Seen a Face" is coyly seductive, topping drum programs proposed by producer Larry Klein (Joni Mitchell, Shawn Colvin).

"It's funny, 'cause Larry said 'I know you don't like the idea [of drum programming], but just try it, and if you hate it, we won't put it on the record,'" says Cole, who was used to recording with just piano, bass and percussion. "I lived with it for a couple of weeks, and now I love it—and the song that has the most programming is the first single off the record."

"I don't generally go to the Beatles to look for a song to put on a record, because everybody has really done that to death," Cole says. She picked that song because it reminded her of how she met her current boyfriend. "It wasn't as well known a song, and also was from the earlier period of the Beatles—and especially with Larry, we could make it into something contemporary."

Indeed, Cole brought her interpretative skills to bear for most of Dark, Dear Heart, on which she also covers songs by Mitchell ("River," chosen before Joni's ex-husband/still-friend Klein was involved), Sheryl Crow, Mary Margaret O'Hara and Patty Larkin. Cole embraces the turns, lending alluring harmonies to Crow's previously unrecorded "You Want More."

"As soon as I get comfortable, it makes me more uncomfortable," Cole says. "Larry didn't want me to stick [with one thing]. He was encouraging me to try all kinds of different things with my voice that I hadn't done before. So I sing with a much broader range on this record. I'm trying different sounds, different background vocals—things that are fun."

It's a subtle evolution from Cole's cabaret-style days. "I was using long black gloves and the little black dress and that kind of thing, but that's when cabaret was not hip like it is now," she says on the phone from her Toronto home. "Suddenly, lounge is all the rage now—I saw that creeping up behind me, and I never really wanted to be part of any kind of fad."

"I want people to come to the music in an organic way," says the singer, who is already a star in Canada and Japan. "I don't want people to be hyped into liking it. I want them to learn about it on a grassroots level." ✦

BEER

Sporting Brews

By Peter R. Terhune

Pair Rogue Mogul with skiing and IPAs with boardin'

I CAN'T TELL YOU HOW OFTEN PEOPLE approach me with a worried look on their faces, tell me their favorite wintertime activity and ask which beer they should drink. Come to think of it, I can tell you how many times that's happened: zero.

That's too bad, because pairing the proper beer with your favorite winter pastime can make the difference between a mere good time and a full-on, way-over experience. Two words of caution, though. First, be careful how much you imbibe if your fav activity involves coordination or avoiding hard, immovable objects; wait until the day is done before you start tippling. Second, never use alcohol to warm up; you may feel warmer, but the alcohol is actually dilating your blood vessels and accelerating loss of body heat.

Skiing—Nothing's as refreshing after a day on the slopes as a smooth malty beer with a crisp hop punch. Perhaps it's a metaphor for the sport itself: the sensation of gliding over smooth snow, punctuated by sharp turns. Beers that mimic that experience include Catamount Anniversary Ale, Modern Brewer Fat Cat ESB, Ipswich Pale Ale, Long Trail Hibernator, Rogue Mogul (worth it for the name alone), Boulder ESB or Tremont Ale.

Snowboarding—What better to accompany this brash, upstart sport than a brash, upstart beer. My recommendation: India Pale Ale, a.k.a. IPA. A few short years ago IPA was as rare as snowboarders themselves. Now it's one of the most popular class of craft beers on the market. Hunt down Berkshire Brewing's Lost Sailor IPA, Harpoon IPA, Shipyard's Fuggles IPA, the award-winning Lucknow IPA (available throughout New Hampshire, soon to be in Mass.), Pilgrim IPA, Wachusett IPA or Mill City IPA.

Cross Country Skiing—Devotees of this sport come in three colors: trail-traipsing schleppers, spandex-suited sprinters and free-thinking Telemarking downhillers. Though their agendas may vary, all are drawn to the extra degree of preparation that Nordic skiing entails. Why not carry that over into the après-ski scene by cooking up a bottle of Liefman's Glühkriek or Unibroue's Quelque Chose. These hearty cherry-infused ales taste fine at room temperature; they become exquisite when heated to 160°F and served hot.

Ice Fishing—Dropping a line through the ice requires patience, a high boredom threshold and tolerance for cold. A contemplative mindset doesn't hurt either. When it comes to beer-drinking, sipping, not gulping, is the name of the game; barleywines or strong ales are your best bet. Delivering high alcohol (upwards of 8 percent by volume) and a complex marriage of flavors, these are the beer world's answer to fine whiskey. Examples include Anchor Old Foghorn, Ipswich 1084, Fuller's Old Winter Ale, Geary's Hampshire Ale, Rogue Old Crustacean, Pyramid Snowcap and Samuel Adams Triplebock.

Snowshoeing—What was once a mere expediency has been fetishized into recreation. The beer for those who love tromping through the woods with all the grace of a ballroom dancer in swim fins? Post Road Brewing Co.'s Snowshoe Ale.

Snowmobiling—One of Canada's three great gifts to the world, along with hockey and Second City TV. After a day of terrifying wildlife and filling the air with the shrieks of a thousand tortured chainsaws, why not relax with a really good north-of-the-border beer. Try Brasal Bock, McCauslan St. Ambroise Oatmeal Stout or Unibroue's Maudite.

Hockey—Speaking of things Canadian, Labatt's Ice Beer makes an excellent post-hockey thirst quencher. Or how 'bout Molson Ice, eh?

Skating—All skaters, whether gifted or ungainly, aspire to grace. What better class of beer, then, than genuine monk-brewed Belgian Trappist ales? Chimay, Orval, La Trappe, Rochefort or Westmalle offer enough complexity and sophistication to make even the most clumsy skater feel positively Kerrigan. ✦

DINING

Beguiling Bistro

By: J. Charles Mokriski

Bounteous portions, fine wines and elegant decor at The Vault

OVER THE YEARS I HAVE ADHERED TO AN unwritten rule about evaluating new restaurants. I would not have wanted my skills as a lawyer critiqued and definitively published to the world based upon my first appearance in court a week after I was admitted to the bar. By the same token, a new restaurant deserves a reasonable shakedown period, within which it can train and acclimate its staff, polish its procedures and routines, and generally get the bugs out. Based upon the difference between my early visits to the Vault Bistro and Wine Bar within weeks of its opening, when the cuisine was uneven and the service shaky, and the remarkably good dinners I enjoyed there more recently, I am more convinced than ever that my unwritten rule is just and prudent.

One thing that has been first rate since the Vault opened its doors is its handsome interior and tasteful decor. A fireplace emits a warm, inviting glow that enhances the illumination of a lovely framed floral painting over the mantel. To the right is a long, beautiful copper bar and a number of smart, comfortable booths. Hardwood floors and crisp white linens complete the harmonious picture.

As befits an establishment styling itself a "wine bar," the Vault has an extensive wine list, with selections that range beyond the usual French, Italian and Californian suspects to encompass delights from Chile, Spain and beyond. While we continue to lament the dearth of restaurant wine offerings at below $20 per bottle, what is available here appears fairly priced. The 1989 Montecillo Rioja Riserva ($25) from Spain delivered a superb, fruity bouquet and a smooth but sprightly flavor, well balanced between acid and fruit. It was rendered all the more enjoyable by being served in elegant Riedel crystal. More ordinary selections, including a very credible 1994 Castello della Panaretta Chianti Classico ($21 a bottle, also offered by the glass at $5.25) and a Montes Merlot Special Cuvee from Chile ($22; $5.50 by the glass), were served in less refined but equally spacious stemware.

The Vault's bread is one of the things that has been vastly improved since our first visits. Dense, moist Tuscan loaves with dark crust and an herb-encrusted foccaccia come with a small saucer of olive oil, olives and roasted garlic.

Among appetizers, we relished the Prince Edward Island mussels ($7), a huge bowl containing over two dozen gargantuan, cleanly scrubbed mollusks, simmered in a delectable white wine broth redolent of garlic, chervil, parsley, chives and tarragon. Striking a note of style and practicality, the mussels were accompanied by a classy "poubelle de la table," a bowl for disposing the spent shells. My only cavil with the service of the mussels was the fact that they arrived with a large hand-torn hunk of bread precariously perched on top, either because the kitchen had no faith in its clienteles' ability to figure out how eminently suited to dunking is the pungent broth, or because all restaurants in the '90s have an urge to give their preparations a serious vertical dimension.

Another first-rate appetizer were the Portobello mushrooms with spinach and roasted red peppers. Both the mussels and mushrooms were served in portions large enough to suffice as main courses. Indeed, this is a menu that lends itself to grazing among the appetizer selections without need to venture to the main courses. Such a strategy would be a shame, however, because the Vault's main courses are extraordinarily good. Cioppino ($18) was clearly the best rendition of this classic San Francisco seafood stew that I have ever experienced. A bountiful array of lobster meat, fat sea scallops, tiny squid ringlets, hunks of rich, moist salmon and a second, white fleshed fish, plump mussels and tender little neck clams cohabited a huge bowl with firm potatoes and chopped tomatoes in a beguiling broth of intensely flavored lobster stock fragrant with garlic, saffron and extra virgin olive oil. It was hard to believe I was sitting in dreary, snowbound Boston rather than on the Vieux Bassin of Marseilles.

The Vault's versatile chef, Rebecca Esty, makes a successful transition from ocean to barnyard. Her double center-cut pork chop ($22) was sensational.

Since the prodigious size of the Vault's appetizers is replicated in the size of its main courses, which are twice as big, precious little room is left for dessert. This is not so much of a shame as it might be, since desserts were the weakest part of the Vault's offerings. The much heralded warm chocolate cake ($9), accompanied by a scoop of homemade vanilla ice cream and an array of red currants, was only passable. The pumpkin crême brulée ($8) was better, delivering robust, intense flavor, but its grainy texture and almost granulated crust flawed what otherwise might have been a first-rate confection.

With the appearance of the Vault at Liberty Square, resources for fine dining in the city's financial district have made a quantum leap. ✦

High Tea at Tanjore...Artists at Rialto...Vino at the Boston Wine Expo

WHAT IS THE AVERAGE LENGTH OF time one person will actually stick to a New Year's resolution? Three weeks is a generous guess, but if you can't make it that long and you didn't make it to the Operation Frontline benefit dinner on January 12 at Tremont 647, you can make up for it by donating a couple of bucks to help little kids eat and eat well.

Revelers getting their fill at The Wine Expo.

Notable openings in town include Pete's Bar and Grille on Commonwealth Avenue, site of the former Caffe Lampara, which is a bistro style restaurant with food created under the direction of executive chef Andrew Wilkinson (formerly of New York's Rainbow Room). A new Indian restaurant, Tanjore, has taken up residence at 18 Eliot St. in Harvard Square. Tanjore's specialty is regional dishes—and as a small reminder of the British occupation, the daily serving of high tea.

If you like Mamma Maria's in the North End you can follow the chef, Ray Gillespie, to his new job at The Times restaurant on Broad Street. The cuisine is distinctly Italian, with many seafood items, including baked mussels with linguine, zucchini, tomatoes, bacon and basil.

Coming up in February, shortly after you've stuffed yourself at Boston Cooks, is the Boston Wine Expo. The expo, which runs on February 7 and 8 at the World Trade Center, will feature more than 350 international and domestic wineries. That's more than 1500 glasses of wine, plus celebrity chef demonstrations, seminars and a cigar lounge for $38 a day (in advance) or $60 for two days. It's cheaper than dinner at Grill 23, the Blue Room, Café Celador or Olives—and all the chefs from those restaurants will be there.

Fat is good! Well the right kind of fat, if you know what that is. If you don't, you can go to the 1998 International Conference on the Mediterranean Diet at the Royal Sonesta in Cambridge starting January 24. The conference, organized by Oldways Preservation and Exchange Trust and the Harvard School of Public Health, is designed to answer questions about the great fat myth. Here's a hint: olive oil, good; animal fat, bad.

January and February seem to be event months. It's a sort of last ditch effort to enjoy life before you have to give the IRS your savings. Rialto in Cambridge is hosting a dinner art series in which different artists' work will be on display in the dining room and a prix fixe dinner is available the night of each opening. The first opening, on January 26, will feature artist Cheryl Warrick.

Other events include monthly beer tastings at Boston Beer Works and the Celebrity Chefs Culinary Program at the Fairmont Copley Plaza. The culinary program features some local favorites including Jasper White, Nick Tischler of Zinc and Lydia Shire of Biba.

If you're a chef groupie (like me) you can catch more of them and other celebrities during the Great Recipe Festival at the Boston Park Plaza from January 10 through March 28. The chefs and celebrities will share recipes and stories during demonstrations and tastings. Some of the notables include Stan Frankenthaler of Salamander and Red Herring, Bruce Marks of the Boston Ballet, Ian Just and Lorenzo Savona of Les Zygomates and Jam Navaraj of The Exchange. ✦

By JONATHAN SOROFF

Soroff/ On MARGERY EAGAN

AS A COLUMNIST FOR THE BOSTON HERALD, MARGERY EAGAN, 43, HAS tackled issues ranging from the Wonder Bra to the Louise Woodward case. To her fans, Eagan is Everywoman—a working mother who's trying to hold it all together—while her critics consider her the paper's token whiny liberal.

Born and raised in Fall River, she transferred from Smith to Stanford in hopes of getting a date. As a reporter, she's written for the Boston Globe and Boston Magazine, and for the past nine years, her column has appeared three times a week in the Herald, where her name remains misspelled in the library's clip file.

Jonathan Soroff joined her for coffee at her Brookline home.

Jonathan Soroff: 10 years as a columnist?
Margery Eagan: Yup, and I haven't won any prizes yet. You know, Eileen McNamara only had her column for six months before she won the Pulitzer...that was a tough moment for me, like someone had died. But of course we at the Herald don't even enter the Pulitzers anymore, because they don't bother to open our entries.
JS: Why didn't you take your husband's name?
ME: If his name was Rockefeller or Kennedy, I might have.
JS: What's the most embarrassing thing that's ever happened to you?
ME: I published in the newspaper the wrong guy urinating on the lawn at Everett High School. And I was sued. And I lost.
JS: What's more painful—childbirth or paying your taxes?
ME: Paying my taxes. I'm one of those earth mothers—I was into childbirth, big time. I had three babies, no drugs.
JS: Which political figure would you most like to punch in the nose?
ME: Hillary Clinton. Thank God she hasn't said much for three years, but as soon as she opens her mouth, she puts her foot in it, and she's so annoying. I can't stand her.
JS: Are soccer moms modern-day Stepford Wives, or real people?
ME: I see them, they're out there, in their sport utility vehicles, and they make me feel guilty for everything I don't do as a mother. Thank God none of my kids play soccer.
JS: If women ruled the world, name one thing that would improve.
ME: There wouldn't be a million sports stories in the newspaper.
JS: If you had a penis for one day, what would you do with it?
ME: Sleep with lots of women.
JS: Oprah—friend or foe?
ME: I used to adore Oprah, but when I saw her book—Words of Wisdom from Oprah—it's advice on everything, I thought: Who the hell is she, really? I think she's started to believe her own publicity.
JS: Do you relate to the images you see of women in fashion magazines?
ME: Well, I'm 43, and those are 17 year olds. But I do have a small rear end.
JS: Which supermodel would you most like to strangle?
ME: I can't get impassioned about supermodels. I think it must be awful to be a model, even though you make millions of dollars. I don't feel jealous. I feel like—what a stupid way to live your life. There's something kind of pathetic about the whole thing.
JS: What's your latest pet peeve?
ME: It's a professional dilemma. On the one hand, I think we're becoming ridiculous in the media with the emphasis on celebrity scandals, but on the other hand, it's all I really want to write about.
JS: In the modern fairytale, Cinderella goes to the ball, and then what? Fill in the ending.
ME: Oh boy. All my single friends would say that Prince Charming turned out to be either gay or married.
JS: Do working mothers deserve a federal subsidy for Valium?
ME: Yeah. Valium, Prozac...I also think we should have a federally subsidized cocktail hour, so that we could get together and vent.
JS: What's it like to be the only liberal in a pit of conservatives?
ME: Well, Howie Carr used to call me "the pabulum puker from Brookline," but truth be told, I'm not as liberal as I used to be. One of the good things about getting older is that after 20 years, I finally feel entitled to my opinion, and if they laugh at me or call me names, I've attained a level of confidence where I can say I don't care. Most of the time. On a good day.
JS: Does Martha Stewart deserve the death penalty?
ME: I'm conflicted about her. Does she represent something I aspire to? Yes. But the problem with her is that she's created this world you can't have without lots of money, or time, or talent. And if she wasn't rubbing our noses in it, we might not be so obsessed with it.
JS: How about Kathie Lee Gifford?
ME: Well, she's just pathetic, isn't she? She's a disgrace. But there's a certain beauty in thinking about how she's torturing Frank, don't you think?
JS: If you're reincarnated, what do you want to come back as?
ME: The perfect woman. But, then again, if things didn't work out in every aspect of my life—what would my excuse be? I'd be a failure!
JS: True or false: Children are like farts—you only like your own?

Back Bay's Best-Kept Musical Secret

By Paul Solman

It's one of the cliches of economics: there is no such thing as a free lunch. But what's served on Newbury Street every Sunday from September to May challenges "the dismal science." In fact, it challenges mundane materialism in more ways than you can shake a spoon at. And the main course is a helluva meal all by itself: free Bach.

It's amazing. For 30-some consecutive weeks, a world-ranked orchestra (Emmanuel Music) under the direction of a fabled conductor (Baroque batonist Craig Smith and, once a year, Seiji Ozawa) performs a full Bach cantata, among other wondrous works of music. And it all plays in a facility where 600-plus free seats go begging every Sunday. Go figure.

Actually, there is a plausible explanation: The concert is part of a real-life church service—an Episcopal service, no less, complete with religious paraphernalia, prayers, that one epistle Paul seems to have cc-ed to everyone from the Corinthians to the Philippians, a sermon, even communion (wafer=Jesus; wine, his blood). This could turn off your average existentialist, atheist, or even agnostic. It could also cow Hindus, Moslems or Buddhists, not to mention Jews (an especially Bach-loving lot who come off quite poorly in many accounts of Jesus' end).

But, hey, you don't even have to sit through the religious stuff; you can go straight to the cantata. Many parishioners began their association with the church by arriving around 11 am, after most of the service, and just a few minutes before the cantata usually kicks off. Some still come only to hear what is, for them, the main event.

Others come promptly at 10 am to enjoy (on December 7, to pick an example): a prelude of Bach and Buxtehude organ pieces, a plainsong Kyrie to which everyone can sing, a Motet by Heinrich Schütz (the 17th century Bach), Bible readings, the sermon, a responsive prayer (this one by Marian Wright Edelman), two more plainsongs, a haunting little choral work by John Harbison (during Communion), then the second installment of Bach's Christmas Oratorio, followed by a Bach organ "postlude." Sprinkled among all this: prayers, "the Peace" and a collection.

Whenever you come, though, a warning: It's tough to find parking in the neighborhood past 9:40 or so. Best bet thereafter seems to be the Back Bay Garage between Berkeley Street and Clarendon, Boylston and Stuart, with entrances on all but Boylston. Better still, come by bike (as I do, until Back Bay ices over), come by foot, or come by T (Green Line: Arlington stop). All are cheaper than a parking lot.

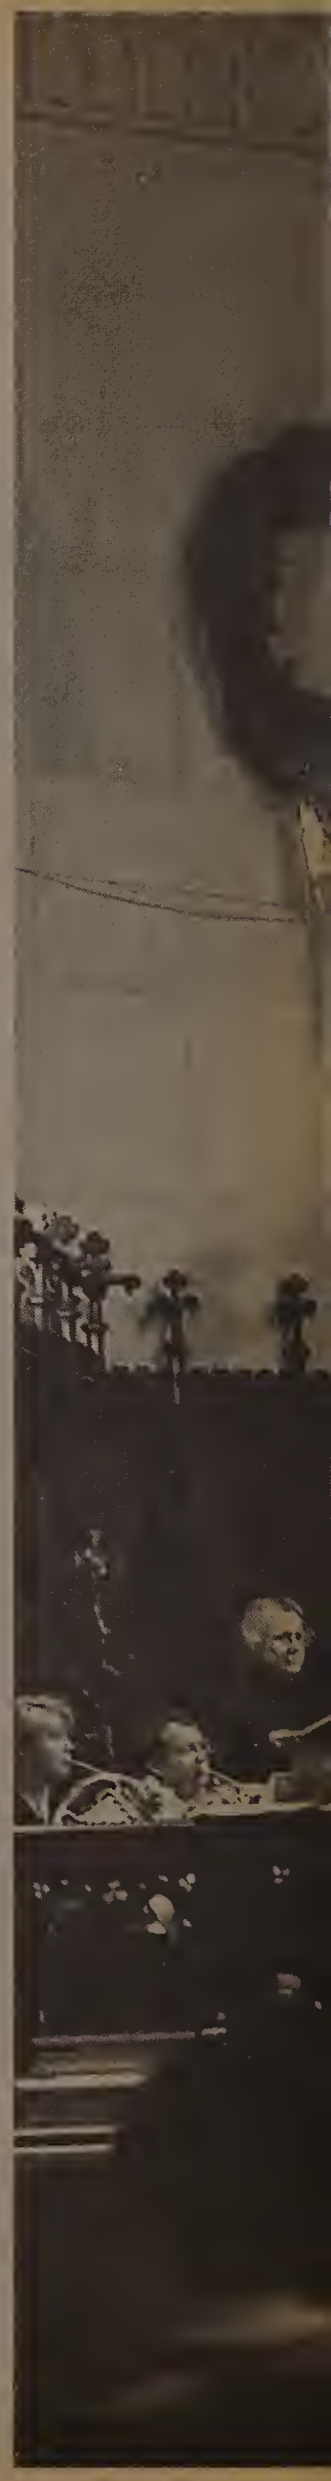
Which brings us back to free lunches. While the Emmanuel service does challenge conventional economics, it does not belie it. The musicians work for far less than union scale (religious dispensation, I guess). But they too must eat, if less well than many of us. Thus contributions—either to the church or Emmanuel Music itself—are devoutly to be wished. They are not, however, mandatory, and no one will guilt trip you if you don't give. Unless, of course, you become addicted to these Sunday mornings, as I have. Then, understandably, you're fair game.

What Else?

The organ music fairly shakes the place.

The assistant conductor is Pulitzer Prize-winning composer John Harbison, whose music is sometimes worked into the service.

The Emmanuel orchestra varies some from week to week, but always scores and often astonishes, featuring local legends like Peggy Pearson on oboe, Julia Skolnick on flute.



The singing soars; from the chorus have come careers such as Sanford Sylvan's.

The cantata is printed in English and German in the program, which also features commentaries on the music that are often revelations. ("The chorale tune 'Vom Himmel hoch,' one of the most beloved of the chorales," read Craig Smith's note on Part II of the Christmas Oratorio, "leads us into the gorgeous slumber aria for alto flute and strings; notice how the flute hovers above the alto voice like a halo.")

There's a very friendly coffee hour after the closing organ solo.

And after it all, you can still get home in time to watch sports on TV, your spirit relieved by the fact that Emmanuel always plays splendidly on Sunday, even when the Patriots or Celtics don't. ✦

CITY HAUL

Smoke Up, Bud

We Bostonians should take great pride in our smokeful city—and laugh uproariously at the surfer slackers and silicone bimbettes in California who have to leave the bar to light up. And to rub it in their tanned faees, we have the opening of The Boston Cigar Factory on January 15 at 186 Lincoln St. Marcia Weaver, whose line of hand-rolled Boston Cigar Factory Cigars are sold at the concierge desk at South Station, is opening the doors of the new factory to the public on Thursday and Friday nights as a Cuban Cafe. Catered by Mucho Gusto, the cafe will serve Cuban coffees, pastries and light fare—with a smoking lounge and cigar rolling—to the caliente backdrop of palm trees and Cuban music. The Cuban Cafe and Boston Cigar Factory will be open from 4 pm into the wee hours of the morning.

Watch This Space

The newest draw on the South End arts scenc is Space 12, a gallery/performance venue open since September at 12 Union Park St. With space galore, a darkroom and a menu of events running from wine tastings and screenings to energetic mixed-means collaboration, this common ground for artists and audience to mingle is luring equally varied crowds to its openings. The brainchild of video artists Greg Shea and Sandy Larson, who aim to jumpstart a lately dormant seene with unconventional offerings, Space 12 currently features metal sculpture by Nicole Peskin, large scale acrylics by Shane Murray and photography by Liz Linder. A joint program by Linder and dancer Christine Bennett is set for January 31, with works by eclectic artist Paul Richard to follow in February. Shea and Larson's contagious enthusiasm for edgy happenings should make for an interesting season. Gallery hours: Tues. & Thurs. 12-2 pm, Sat. & Sun. 1-5 pm. —Mimi Hirsh

The Short Of It

Direct from the Cafe Carlyle, brought to you by those who abhor the winter doldrums, comes legendary piano man Bobby Short, on his annual and all-too-short stint in Boston. The master of Cole Porteresque cabaret, Short will be at Scullers Jazz Club at the DoubleTree Guest Suites Hotel at 400 Soldiers Field Rd. from January 29-31. Call 562-4111 for details.

PICK OF THE LITTER

'Twas the season of conspicuous consumption, and with that sacred sentiment of spend, spend, spend in mind, here are the most popular products sold during the holidays at a variety of Boston stores.

As last fall's failures go into "hiatus," be on the lookout for new series. Add to the list ABC's Prey (Thursday, Jan. 15, 8 pm, Channel 5) about a bio-anthropologist (Debra Messing) who searches out a new killer species of humans. Meanwhile, on ER (Thursday, Jan. 15, 10 pm, Channel 7) Hathaway (Julianna Margulies) has a surprise for Dr. Ross (George Clooney), hmmmm.... Nash Bridges (Friday, Jan. 16, 10 pm, Channel 4) has one of those greatest-hits-flashback episodes, emceed by Mr. Journalism himself, Geraldo Rivera. Also features a cameo by San Francisco mayor Willie Brown.

FOR THE PATRIOTS FAN/CLOSET MASOCHIST: Break out the dip—Super Bowl XXXII, this time in San Diego, broadcasts on NBC Sunday, Jan. 25. The Patriots won't be making the flight this time, but you can relive the highlights of their 1986 ass-kicking at the hands of the Chicago Bears on ESPN2 (Friday, Jan. 16, 2:30 pm).

WILL THIS AFFECT MY 401(K)?: 1993's Barbarians at the Gate (Friday, Jan. 16, 8 pm and 11 pm, CNBC) is a made-for-cable satirical look at real-life, bull market merger-mania. Based on the best-seller in which RJR Nabisco CEO R. Ross Johnson (James Garner), trying to hide his own failures, attempts to buy the company but is challenged by leveraged-buy-out legend Henry Kravis.

AM I PATTY OR AM I CATHY?: Doing a sitcom about "twin cousins" couldn't have helped, but talented child and adult actress Patty Duke led a life plagued with self-destructive behavior until finally being diagnosed with and treated for manie depression. She chronicled her story in an autobiography and starred in the 1990 made-for-TV movie adaptation Call Me Anna (her birth name). On Lifetime, Friday, Jan. 16, 9 pm.

THESE DAYS, YOU COULD SUE FOR EMOTIONAL ABUSE: Before L.A. Law, there was The Paper Chase (Saturday, Jan. 17, 9:50 pm, Channel 2). This 1973 movie, filmed in and around Cambridge, chronicles the life of Harvard law students and their lovable but sadistic professor, played by John Houseman.

Beauty & TRUTH

Julie Michaud, Boston's beauty upstart.

MICHAUD, MA BELLE

They're fixing the damn Artery—even the zoo is getting an overhaul. Isn't it time Boston had a groovy salon for first-class makeovers and make-up?

Gripe no longer, my little chickadee: Julie Michaud, a commercial make-up artist famous among Beantown models and photographers for her subtle, natural application of cosmetics, has created a make-up line that reflects what babes want in their war paint. Whether you're a high-maintenance glamour junkie or a part-time primper, you'll get hooked on the quality of Julie's line—and the tips that come with the colors.

Michaud's foundations are top notch, ranging in coverage from sheer to supreme while never looking obvious. Her loose powder is so finely ground, it'll leave your face flawlessly finished, without looking overdone.

Her collection includes matte lipsticks that go on smooth and won't dry out your kisser, eyeshadows that stay where you put them and a fine selection of products for pulling off slick beauty tricks. Michaud's Lip Primer stops feathering and lipstick bleeding. Her Shadow Primer makes dark eyelids appear paler and helps your eyeshadow adhere—best of all, it's completely creaseproof.

Michaud is tucked into the backside of Solus salon on the third floor of 115 Newbury St. Walk in, or call 236-1115 to make an appointment for a consultation and a tour of her line. ✦

E.T. PHONE HOME

Relief is in sight for molting mouths, cracked kissers and peeling puckers.

Earth Therapeutics is a hippie-dippie company with a scrumptious line of skin care goodies any flowerchild's granddaughter would be proud to own. Testers whose jobs call for latex gloves love E.T.'s Gardener's Hand Repair. For well-protected paws, slather on this lotion before slipping into the rubber restraints. Even after a scrub of the kitchen floor, your hands will be Cinderella-smooth. Testers with mild eczema found relief from their skanky scaling thanks to this mildly-scented skin slime. Hand Repair goes on smooth and never feels greasy. For $7.99, you get six flowing ounces that have never been tested on cute lil' bunnies.

Earth Therapeutics' tea tree oil-based foot care line gets the happy heeler award from our testing crew. Hunka-chunka he-men can bring their booties in from the porch: E.T.'s quick-drying Liquid Foot Powder erases sock stench, leaving your wingtips fresh as a winter morning.

I'm loving their multipurpose Fire & Ice Full Coverage Herbal Beauty Mask these days. Chill this Phantom of the Garden face cover in the fridge, then Velcro it over your eyes to reduce hangover puffiness left by last night's bender with the highway crew. Heated in the microwave, or under hot tap water, it soothes irritated sinuses. Or turn your facial moisturizer into a deep-penetrating moisture mask—slather a good layer of lotion onto your face, then strap on a warmed-up Gel Mask. Relax for 10 minutes, then remove and enjoy your newly supple skin. This herbal Lone Ranger number costs a whopping 25 smackers, but with proper care it'll last for years. Plus it's great for scaring those pesky kids who keep ringing your doorbell.

Bread and Circus stores carry some of this line, and there's been an ET sighting at Marshall's. Call Earth Therapeutics at (800)789-3579 for other locations near you. ✦

CHAPPED LIPS SINK SHIPS

Smart sailors know that their dockside dollies appreciate kisses from lips as smooth as summer seas. Before you plant that anchor, matey, make sure your pucker is shipshape!

First step: throw those mentholated lip treatments out the porthole. Balms like Blistex or Carmex tingle and feel like they're working, but these ointments are actually drying your lips even more, so you feel you have to slather on extra products, which dries your kisser further, creating a co-dependent relationship with what I call peppermint lip crack. Read the label: if you see ingredients like camphor, clove oil, wintergreen, rosemary or menthol, avoid it like the scurvy.

Also stay away from harsh, AHA-containing lip treatments that claim to exfoliate dried-up lip scum. Instead, use your toothbrush, a damp face cloth or the Body Shop's Lipscuff to remove flaking flesh.

Guerlain's Lip Balm (available at high-class department stores) is the champion choice for deckhands who shun the prissy, Back Street Boys shine of glossy lip lotions. Mixed from beeswax, sweet almond oil and a nip of Bordeaux wine, it's great for people who are allergic to the petrolatum found in most lip ointments. Breastfeeding moms with cracked nipples find it soothing, as do noses chapped from over-blowing. I call this gentle soother a lip cure—and at $18 for a mere 1/2 oz.—it better be.

Testers who took Kiehl's Lip Balm #1 and Elizabeth Arden's Eight Hour Cream for a cruise were more than jolly when they got back to port. Both products protect against further chapping and instantly cure windburned skier's sore smackers. Kiehls' also makes a lipbalm for babies, which is ideal for super-sensitive pouts.

Mast monkeys on a budget should reach for the Body Shop and Bath and Body selection of balms, or Chapstick and Vaseline for simple upkeep. See you under the boardwalk! ✦

This hipple-dip herbal line does more than spare bunnies—it actually works.

Emira Nusevic in Winterbottom's Welcome to Sarajevo.

MOVIES

Human-Scale Heroism

By Betsy Sherman

Welcome to Sarajevo—not your typical war-reporter flick

A SLICE OF LIFE IN 1992 SARAJEVO. A group of women rev up enough generator power to get their hair done in preparation for a wedding. Their proud strut down the street on the way to the church is interrupted, mortally, by sniper fire.

As our view of the scene changes from 35mm film to videotape we switch to the point of view of foreign correspondents covering the war—and commenting on the carnage from relative safety. One of the reporters risks his life to help a priest carry a victim inside a church. But the movie isn't about him—it's about the fellow reporter who looks upon the showoff with distaste.

Michael Winterbottom's powerful Welcome to Sarajevo is a refreshing departure from the standard war-reporter yarn. Its kinetic mix of archival footage with a fictional story isn't unique, but is particularly adroit and energized. Its emphasis on what unites Sarajevo with other cosmopolitan European capitals rather than what divides it from them is provocative. And its portrait of a protagonist who takes human-scale steps toward an act of heroism avoids the cliche of the larger-than-life scribe. On the latter count, the casting of the talented stage actor Stephen Dillane—not a familiar movie face—as correspondent Michael Henderson adds enormously to the credibility of the action.

This British production is loosely based on the true story of a reporter who adopted a Bosnian girl and brought her to safety in England. Before this storyline emerges, Winterbottom (whose previous features were Butterfly Kiss and Jude) creates a mosaic out of scenes of the foreign reporters at work and at play, glimpses of Sarajevans coping with the assaults on their lives by Bosnian Serb guerillas and sardonic montages of world leaders waffling over whether to intervene in the former Yugoslavia. The film's signature bite of gallows humor is when the spokesman for the UN peacekeepers tells reporters that there are 13 places in the world worse off than Bosnia. American hotshot reporter Flynn, played by Woody Harrelson, wonders aloud whether their beat is moving up or down the list.

Welcome to Sarajevo conveys the genuine concern of the reporters—even Flynn—for their subjects, and their frustration when their heart-breaking footage is bumped by the network folks back home for items such as the separation of Andrew and Fergie. Henderson finds new energy championing the plight of an orphanage on the frontline. He feels sure he can stir viewers' compassion with the series: He vows, "Every night, different child, same message: 'Get me out of here.'" At the orphanage, through his driver/translator, he makes a promise to nine-year-old Emira that he'll get her out of the war zone.

Henderson meant his statement in general terms, but when his return to England coincides with the evacuation of some of the orphanage's babies to Italy (by an aid worker played by Marisa Tomei), he responds to Emira's entreaty with a declaration that he will take her to England. He and Emira ride with the peacekeeper-escorted busload of orphans through the perilous landscape. Emira has a maternal attachment to a baby whom she calls Roadrunner; the rupture of this bond becomes one of the film's most terrifying sequences.

A quick montage of home movies shows Emira's integration into the comfortable rituals of birthday parties and classroom lessons as a charmed passage from a traumatic to a normal childhood. In order to keep Emira in this world, Henderson has to make another trip to Sarajevo to cement his commitment to the adoption.

Winterbottom, writer Frank Cottrell Boyce and editor Trevor Waite keep the film's focus simple, sharp and unsentimental. It's a weighty film that feels light—choice cuts of pop songs and classical music stir a range of emotions. The performances are superb, ranging from Dillane and Kerry Fox's recession into their journalist characters to Harrelson's double-sided Flynn, a wiseass who is as committed as the rest of them to telling Sarajevo's stories. ✦

AD HOC

Cross Purposes

By Tom Weisend

Blue Cross takes a risk and goes too far

IF THERE WERE AWARDS FOR CREEPY advertising, we'd already have a winner so early in the year: Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Massachusetts returned to the TV airwaves with the most unsettling ad of the season. It appears that Blue Cross has met Blue Velvet.

On the one hand, it's a brave move by a company that needs to show a little courage. After being buffeted by record losses, Blue Cross posted some cautiously favorable earnings in the past six months. By the same token, the reassuring and plain-talking approach that Blue Cross took in newspapers and radio earlier this year has been tossed, which is confusing for consumers because this new spot marks Blue Cross' third change in advertising direction since last year.

Blue Cross prooves unsettling.

This is a 180 for Blue Cross. It changed ad agencies in the fall, ending its nine-year relationship with Arnold Communications in favor of the city's upstart agency of the year, Holland Mark Martin Edmund. Known for shaking things up for The Boston Globe and USTrust, HMME has not failed to provide some turbulence for Blue Cross.

Healthcare isn't always pretty and the same holds true for this Blue Cross ad. The colors are overly saturated for effect, the images are shot out of proportion and the ad agency has found the ugliest hospital (is that redundant?) in the world to shoot it at. It looks like a Chernobyl facility shortly after the accident.

Basically, we see two people sitting side by side huddling in a fluorescent wasteland of a hospital waiting room against a strange backdrop of a forest scene painted on the wall. Their tension is communicated by her single tear streaming down her face and his sweat-soaked shirt and grim expression. There's even a shot of the air conditioning duct in the hideous drop ceiling. This is not a happy place.

The copy tells us that while there are many times we have to be concerned about medical issues, we should never be concerned about our healthcare plan. This message is delivered with spooky music that sounds like it was composed by Philip Glass in a deep depression.

The ad is fascinating to look at, but it leaves me colder than the air in January. The not-so-complex message seems to be that when catastrophe strikes, a Blue Cross health plan will be right there with you. Worry about your sick loved one or stricken self and not your insurance. This is a pretty typical healthcare advertising message—competitors from Fallon Health Care to Cigna have similar pitches, albeit with vastly different executions of the message.

The Blue Cross commercial goes awry because it gets too arty and weird for its own good. It makes its pedestrian point in the first few seconds, and then seems to have nowhere to go, so it attempts to gloss over the plainness of its point with distracting and disturbing-yet-hip images. Unless it's trying to give us clues that these people are concerned about a family member with legionnaire's disease, why the shot of the air conditioning vent for heaven's sake? While I applaud the dearth of sentimentality that can sometimes overcrowd healthcare messages, this seems to lose its focus in a self-conscious attempt to avoid any hint of those cheery clichés.

Blue Cross and HMME took a risk here and very nearly pulled off a coup. But the ad fails because it says too little after promising a big payoff. It's a rare disappointment from the agency, and an expensive error for the insurer. ✦

Holly Cole: She got the bug at Berklee.

MUSIC

Sultry Chanteuse

By Paul Robicheau

Toronto's Holly Cole returns to Boston to rock the Paradise

MOST TOURING MUSICIANS AVOID Boston in January weather. But when you come from Canada like Toronto-based singer Holly Cole, that's not an issue. "I'm excited to come to Boston 'cause I've got so much history there," says Cole, who plays the Paradise Jan. 23. "It's the place that influenced me to become a musician."

That turning point came when Cole was 16, visiting a brother who was studying jazz piano at Berklee. They hailed from a musical family in Nova Scotia, their parents both classically trained on piano, which Holly also played from age three. A grandfather taught her country tunes on accordion. Then came '60s pop, from Joni to Jimi. But Berklee changed all that.

"It was jazz I guess that inspired me to become a singer," says Cole, 34, whose love for saxophonist Eric Dolphy led to a passion for vocalists like Betty Carter, Sarah Vaughan and Billie Holiday. "I got the bug, and hung out [at Berklee]. I would sit in with people's ensembles. I wasn't supposed to be there—I was just the sister of someone going there, but he would sneak me in."

Now the sultry chanteuse is trying another scene in Boston. After playing jazz rooms like Scullers, Cole is playing the Paradise Rock Club, has added guitar and drums to her band and leads off her latest CD Dark, Dear Heart with a Beatles cover.

"It's not that I've so much changed or anything, as much as this album is just a different facet of who I am, and who I've always been," Cole says. Her version of "I've Just Seen a Face" is coyly seductive, topping drum programs proposed by producer Larry Klein (Joni Mitchell, Shawn Colvin).

"It's funny, 'cause Larry said 'I know you don't like the idea [of drum programming], but just try it, and if you hate it, we won't put it on the record,'" says Cole, who was used to recording with just piano, bass and percussion. "I lived with it for a couple of weeks, and now I love it—and the song that has the most programming is the first single off the record."

"I don't generally go to the Beatles to look for a song to put on a record, because everybody has really done that to death," Cole says. She picked that song because it reminded her of how she met her current boyfriend. "It wasn't as well known a song, and also was from the earlier period of the Beatles—and especially with Larry, we could make it into something contemporary."

Indeed, Cole brought her interpretative skills to bear for most of Dark, Dear Heart, on which she also covers songs by Mitchell ("River," chosen before Joni's ex-husband/still-friend Klein was involved), Sheryl Crow, Mary Margaret O'Hara and Patty Larkin. Cole embraces the turns, lending alluring harmonies to Crow's previously unrecorded "You Want More."

"As soon as I get comfortable, it makes me more uncomfortable," Cole says. "Larry didn't want me to stick [with one thing]. He was encouraging me to try all kinds of different things with my voice that I hadn't done before. So I sing with a much broader range on this record. I'm trying different sounds, different background vocals—things that are fun."

It's a subtle evolution from Cole's cabaret-style days. "I was using long black gloves and the little black dress and that kind of thing, but that's when cabaret was not hip like it is now," she says on the phone from her Toronto home. "Suddenly, lounge is all the rage now—I saw that creeping up behind me, and I never really wanted to be part of any kind of fad."

"I want people to come to the music in an organic way," says the singer, who is already a star in Canada and Japan. "I don't want people to be hyped into liking it. I want them to learn about it on a grassroots level." ✦

BEER

Sporting Brews

By Peter R. Terhune

Pair Rogue Mogul with skiing and IPAs with boardin'

I CAN'T TELL YOU HOW OFTEN PEOPLE approach me with a worried look on their faces, tell me their favorite winter-time activity and ask which beer they should drink. Come to think of it, I can tell you how many times that's happened: zero.

That's too bad, because pairing the proper beer with your favorite winter pastime can make the difference between a mere good time and a full-on, way-over experience. Two words of caution, though. First, be careful how much you imbibe if your fav activity involves coordination or avoiding hard, immovable objects; wait until the day is done before you start tippling. Second, never use alcohol to warm up; you may feel warmer, but the alcohol is actually dilating your blood vessels and accelerating loss of body heat.

Skiing—Nothing's as refreshing after a day on the slopes as a smooth malty beer with a crisp hop punch. Perhaps it's a metaphor for the sport itself: the sensation of gliding over smooth snow, punctuated by sharp turns. Beers that mimic that experience include Catamount Anniversary Ale, Modern Brewer Fat Cat ESB, Ipswich Pale Ale, Long Trail Hibernator, Rogue Mogul (worth it for the name alone), Boulder ESB or Tremont Ale.

Snowboarding—What better to accompany this brash, upstart sport than a brash, upstart beer. My recommendation: India Pale Ale, a.k.a. IPA. A few short years ago IPA was as rare as snowboarders themselves. Now it's one of the most popular class of craft beers on the market. Hunt down Berkshire Brewing's Lost Sailor IPA, Harpoon IPA, Shipyard's Fuggles IPA, the award-winning Lucknow IPA (available throughout New Hampshire, soon to be in Mass.), Pilgrim IPA, Wachusett IPA or Mill City IPA.

Cross Country Skiing—Devotees of this sport come in three colors: trail-traipsing schleppers, spandex-suited sprinters and free-thinking Telemarking downhillers. Though their agendas may vary, all are drawn to the extra degree of preparation that Nordic skiing entails. Why not carry that over into the après-ski scene by cooking up a bottle of Liefman's Glühkriek or Unibroue's Quelque Chose. These hearty cherry-infused ales taste fine at room temperature; they become exquisite when heated to 160°F and served hot.

Ice Fishing—Dropping a line through the ice requires patience, a high boredom threshold and tolerance for cold. A contemplative mindset doesn't hurt either. When it comes to beer-drinking, sipping, not gulping, is the name of the game; barleywines or strong ales are your best bet. Delivering high alcohol (upwards of 8 percent by volume) and a complex marriage of flavors, these are the beer world's answer to fine whiskey. Examples include Anchor Old Foghorn, Ipswich 1084, Fuller's Old Winter Ale, Geary's Hampshire Ale, Rogue Old Crustacean, Pyramid Snowcap and Samuel Adams Triplebock.

Snowshoeing—What was once a mere expediency has been fetishized into recreation. The beer for those who love tromping through the woods with all the grace of a ballroom dancer in swim fins? Post Road Brewing Co.'s Snowshoe Ale.

Snowmobiling—One of Canada's three great gifts to the world, along with hockey and Second City TV. After a day of terrifying wildlife and filling the air with the shrieks of a thousand tortured chainsaws, why not relax with a really good north-of-the-border beer. Try Brasal Bock, McCauslan St. Ambroise Oatmeal Stout or Unibroue's Maudite.

Hockey—Speaking of things Canadian, Labatt's Ice Beer makes an excellent post-hockey thirst quencher. Or how 'bout Molson Ice, eh?

Skating—All skaters, whether gifted or ungainly, aspire to grace. What better class of beer, then, than genuine monk-brewed Belgian Trappist ales? Chimay, Orval, La Trappe, Rochefort or Westmalle offer enough complexity and sophistication to make even the most clumsy skater feel positively Kerrigan. ✦

DINING

Beguiling Bistro

By: J. Charles Mokriski

Bounteous portions, fine wines and elegant decor at The Vault

OVER THE YEARS I HAVE ADHERED TO AN unwritten rule about evaluating new restaurants. I would not have wanted my skills as a lawyer critiqued and definitively published to the world based upon my first appearance in court a week after I was admitted to the bar. By the same token, a new restaurant deserves a reasonable shakedown period, within which it can train and acclimate its staff, polish its procedures and routines, and generally get the bugs out. Based upon the difference between my early visits to the Vault Bistro and Wine Bar within weeks of its opening, when the cuisine was uneven and the service shaky, and the remarkably good dinners I enjoyed there more recently, I am more convinced than ever that my unwritten rule is just and prudent.

One thing that has been first rate since the Vault opened its doors is its handsome interior and tasteful decor. A fireplace emits a warm, inviting glow that enhances the illumination of a lovely framed floral painting over the mantel. To the right is a long, beautiful copper bar and a number of smart, comfortable booths. Hardwood floors and crisp white linens complete the harmonious picture.

As befits an establishment styling itself a "wine bar," the Vault has an extensive wine list, with selections that range beyond the usual French, Italian and Californian suspects to encompass delights from Chile, Spain and beyond. While we continue to lament the dearth of restaurant wine offerings at below $20 per bottle, what is available here appears fairly priced. The 1989 Montecillo Rioja Riserva ($25) from Spain delivered a superb, fruity bouquet and a smooth but sprightly flavor, well balanced between acid and fruit. It was rendered all the more enjoyable by being served in elegant Riedel crystal. More ordinary selections, including a very credible 1994 Castello della Panaretta Chianti Classico ($21 a bottle, also offered by the glass at $5.25) and a Montes Merlot Special Cuvee from Chile ($22; $5.50 by the glass), were served in less refined but equally spacious stemware.

The Vault's bread is one of the things that has been vastly improved since our first visits. Dense, moist Tuscan loaves with dark crust and an herb-encrusted foccaccia come with a small saucer of olive oil, olives and roasted garlic.

Among appetizers, we relished the Prince Edward Island mussels ($7), a huge bowl containing over two dozen gargantuan, cleanly scrubbed mollusks, simmered in a delectable white wine broth redolent of garlic, chervil, parsley, chives and tarragon. Striking a note of style and practicality, the mussels were accompanied by a classy "poubelle de la table," a bowl for disposing the spent shells. My only cavil with the service of the mussels was the fact that they arrived with a large hand-torn hunk of bread precariously perched on top, either because the kitchen had no faith in its clienteles' ability to figure out how eminently suited to dunking is the pungent broth, or because all restaurants in the '90s have an urge to give their preparations a serious vertical dimension.

Another first-rate appetizer were the Portobello mushrooms with spinach and roasted red peppers. Both the mussels and mushrooms were served in portions large enough to suffice as main courses. Indeed, this is a menu that lends itself to grazing among the appetizer selections without need to venture to the main courses. Such a strategy would be a shame, however, because the Vault's main courses are extraordinarily good. Cioppino ($18) was clearly the best rendition of this classic San Francisco seafood stew that I have ever experienced. A bountiful array of lobster meat, fat sea scallops, tiny squid ringlets, hunks of rich, moist salmon and a second, white fleshed fish, plump mussels and tender little neck clams cohabited a huge bowl with firm potatoes and chopped tomatoes in a beguiling broth of intensely flavored lobster stock fragrant with garlic, saffron and extra virgin olive oil. It was hard to believe I was sitting in dreary, snowbound Boston rather than on the Vieux Bassin of Marseilles.

The Vault's versatile chef, Rebecca Esty, makes a successful transition from ocean to barnyard. Her double center-cut pork chop ($22) was sensational.

Since the prodigious size of the Vault's appetizers is replicated in the size of its main courses, which are twice as big, precious little room is left for dessert. This is not so much of a shame as it might be, since desserts were the weakest part of the Vault's offerings. The much heralded warm chocolate cake ($9), accompanied by a scoop of homemade vanilla ice cream and an array of red currants, was only passable. The pumpkin crême brulée ($8) was better, delivering robust, intense flavor, but its grainy texture and almost granulated crust flawed what otherwise might have been a first-rate confection.

With the appearance of the Vault at Liberty Square, resources for fine dining in the city's financial district have made a quantum leap. ✦

High Tea at Tanjore...Artists at Rialto...Vino at the Boston Wine Expo

WHAT IS THE AVERAGE LENGTH OF time one person will actually stick to a New Year's resolution? Three weeks is a generous guess, but if you can't make it that long and you didn't make it to the Operation Frontline benefit dinner on January 12 at Tremont 647, you can make up for it by donating a couple of bucks to help little kids eat and eat well.

Revelers getting their fill at The Wine Expo.

Notable openings in town include Pete's Bar and Grille on Commonwealth Avenue, site of the former Caffe Lampara, which is a bistro style restaurant with food created under the direction of executive chef Andrew Wilkinson (formerly of New York's Rainbow Room). A new Indian restaurant, Tanjore, has taken up residence at 18 Eliot St. in Harvard Square. Tanjore's specialty is regional dishes—and as a small reminder of the British occupation, the daily serving of high tea.

If you like Mamma Maria's in the North End you can follow the chef, Ray Gillespie, to his new job at The Times restaurant on Broad Street. The cuisine is distinctly Italian, with many seafood items, including baked mussels with linguine, zucchini, tomatoes, bacon and basil.

Coming up in February, shortly after you've stuffed yourself at Boston Cooks, is the Boston Wine Expo. The expo, which runs on February 7 and 8 at the World Trade Center, will feature more than 350 international and domestic wineries. That's more than 1500 glasses of wine, plus celebrity chef demonstrations, seminars and a cigar lounge for $38 a day (in advance) or $60 for two days. It's cheaper than dinner at Grill 23, the Blue Room, Café Celador or Olives—and all the chefs from those restaurants will be there.

Fat is good! Well the right kind of fat, if you know what that is. If you don't, you can go to the 1998 International Conference on the Mediterranean Diet at the Royal Sonesta in Cambridge starting January 24. The conference, organized by Oldways Preservation and Exchange Trust and the Harvard School of Public Health, is designed to answer questions about the great fat myth. Here's a hint: olive oil, good; animal fat, bad.

January and February seem to be event months. It's a sort of last ditch effort to enjoy life before you have to give the IRS your savings. Rialto in Cambridge is hosting a dinner art series in which different artists' work will be on display in the dining room and a prix fixe dinner is available the night of each opening. The first opening, on January 26, will feature artist Cheryl Warrick.

Other events include monthly beer tastings at Boston Beer Works and the Celebrity Chefs Culinary Program at the Fairmont Copley Plaza. The culinary program features some local favorites including Jasper White, Nick Tischler of Zinc and Lydia Shire of Biba.

If you're a chef groupie (like me) you can catch more of them and other celebrities during the Great Recipe Festival at the Boston Park Plaza from January 10 through March 28. The chefs and celebrities will share recipes and stories during demonstrations and tastings. Some of the notables include Stan Frankenthaler of Salamander and Red Herring, Bruce Marks of the Boston Ballet, Ian Just and Lorenzo Savona of Les Zygomates and Jam Navaraj of The Exchange. ✦

AS A COLUMNIST FOR THE BOSTON HERALD, MARGERY EAGAN, 43, HAS tackled issues ranging from the Wonder Bra to the Louise Woodward case. To her fans, Eagan is Everywoman—a working mother who's trying to hold it all together—while her critics consider her the paper's token whiny liberal.

Born and raised in Fall River, she transferred from Smith to Stanford in hopes of getting a date. As a reporter, she's written for the Boston Globe and Boston Magazine, and for the past nine years, her column has appeared three times a week in the Herald, where her name remains misspelled in the library's clip file.

Jonathan Soroff joined her for coffee at her Brookline home.

Jonathan Soroff: 10 years as a columnist?
Margery Eagan: Yup, and I haven't won any prizes yet. You know, Eileen McNamara only had her column for six months before she won the Pulitzer...that was a tough moment for me, like someone had died. But of course we at the Herald don't even enter the Pulitzers anymore, because they don't bother to open our entries.
JS: Why didn't you take your husband's name?
ME: If his name was Rockefeller or Kennedy, I might have.
JS: What's the most embarrassing thing that's ever happened to you?
ME: I published in the newspaper the wrong guy urinating on the lawn at Everett High School. And I was sued. And I lost.
JS: What's more painful—childbirth or paying your taxes?
ME: Paying my taxes. I'm one of those earth mothers—I was into childbirth, big time. I had three babies, no drugs.
JS: Which political figure would you most like to punch in the nose?
ME: Hillary Clinton. Thank God she hasn't said much for three years, but as soon as she opens her mouth, she puts her foot in it, and she's so annoying. I can't stand her.
JS: Are soccer moms modern-day Stepford Wives, or real people?
ME: I see them, they're out there, in their sport utility vehicles, and they make me feel guilty for everything I don't do as a mother. Thank God none of my kids play soccer.
JS: If women ruled the world, name one thing that would improve.
ME: There wouldn't be a million sports stories in the newspaper.
JS: If you had a penis for one day, what would you do with it?
ME: Sleep with lots of women.
JS: Oprah—friend or foe?
ME: I used to adore Oprah, but when I saw her book—Words of Wisdom from Oprah—it's advice on everything, I thought: Who the hell is she, really? I think she's started to believe her own publicity.
JS: Do you relate to the images you see of women in fashion magazines?
ME: Well, I'm 43, and those are 17 year olds. But I do have a small rear end.
JS: Which supermodel would you most like to strangle?
ME: I can't get impassioned about supermodels. I think it must be awful to be a model, even though you make millions of dollars. I don't feel jealous. I feel like—what a stupid way to live your life. There's something kind of pathetic about the whole thing.
JS: What's your latest pet peeve?
ME: It's a professional dilemma. On the one hand, I think we're becoming ridiculous in the media with the emphasis on celebrity scandals, but on the other hand, it's all I really want to write about.
JS: In the modern fairytale, Cinderella goes to the ball, and then what? Fill in the ending.
ME: Oh boy. All my single friends would say that Prince Charming turned out to be either gay or married.
JS: Do working mothers deserve a federal subsidy for Valium?
ME: Yeah. Valium, Prozac...I also think we should have a federally subsidized cocktail hour, so that we could get together and vent.
JS: What's it like to be the only liberal in a pit of conservatives?
ME: Well, Howie Carr used to call me "the pabulum puker from Brookline," but truth be told, I'm not as liberal as I used to be. One of the good things about getting older is that after 20 years, I finally feel entitled to my opinion, and if they laugh at me or call me names, I've attained a level of confidence where I can say I don't care. Most of the time. On a good day.
JS: Does Martha Stewart deserve the death penalty?
ME: I'm conflicted about her. Does she represent something I aspire to? Yes. But the problem with her is that she's created this world you can't have without lots of money, or time, or talent. And if she wasn't rubbing our noses in it, we might not be so obsessed with it.
JS: How about Kathie Lee Gifford?
ME: Well, she's just pathetic, isn't she? She's a disgrace. But there's a certain beauty in thinking about how she's torturing Frank, don't you think?
JS: If you're reincarnated, what do you want to come back as?
ME: The perfect woman. But, then again, if things didn't work out in every aspect of my life—what would my excuse be? I'd be a failure!
JS: True or false: Children are like farts—you only like your own?

Back Bay's Best-Kept Musical Secret

By Paul Solman

It's one of the cliches of economics: there is no such thing as a free lunch. But what's served on Newbury Street every Sunday from September to May challenges "the dismal science." In fact, it challenges mundane materialism in more ways than you can shake a spoon at. And the main course is a helluva meal all by itself: free Bach.

It's amazing. For 30-some consecutive weeks, a world-ranked orchestra (Emmanuel Music) under the direction of a fabled conductor (Baroque batonist Craig Smith and, once a year, Seiji Ozawa) performs a full Bach cantata, among other wondrous works of music. And it all plays in a facility where 600-plus free seats go begging every Sunday. Go figure.

Actually, there is a plausible explanation: The concert is part of a real-life church service—an Episcopal service, no less, complete with religious paraphernalia, prayers, that one epistle Paul seems to have cc-ed to everyone from the Corinthians to the Philippians, a sermon, even communion (wafer-Jesus; wine, his blood). This could turn off your average existentialist, atheist, or even agnostic. It could also cow Hindus, Moslems or Buddhists, not to mention Jews (an especially Bach-loving lot who come off quite poorly in many accounts of Jesus' end).

But, hey, you don't even have to sit through the religious stuff; you can go straight to the cantata. Many parishioners began their association with the church by arriving around 11 am, after most of the service, and just a few minutes before the cantata usually kicks off. Some still come only to hear what is, for them, the main event.

Others come promptly at 10 am to enjoy (on December 7, to pick an example): a prelude of Bach and Buxtehude organ pieces, a plainsong Kyrie to which everyone can sing, a Motet by Heinrich Schütz (the 17th century Bach), Bible readings, the sermon, a responsive prayer (this one by Marian Wright Edelman), two more plainsongs, a haunting little choral work by John Harbison (during Communion), then the second installment of Bach's Christmas Oratorio, followed by a Bach organ "postlude." Sprinkled among all this: prayers, "the Peace" and a collection.

Whenever you come, though, a warning: It's tough to find parking in the neighborhood past 9:40 or so. Best bet thereafter seems to be the Back Bay Garage between Berkeley Street and Clarendon, Boylston and Stuart, with entrances on all but Boylston. Better still, come by bike (as I do, until Back Bay ices over), come by foot, or come by T (Green Line: Arlington stop). All are cheaper than a parking lot.

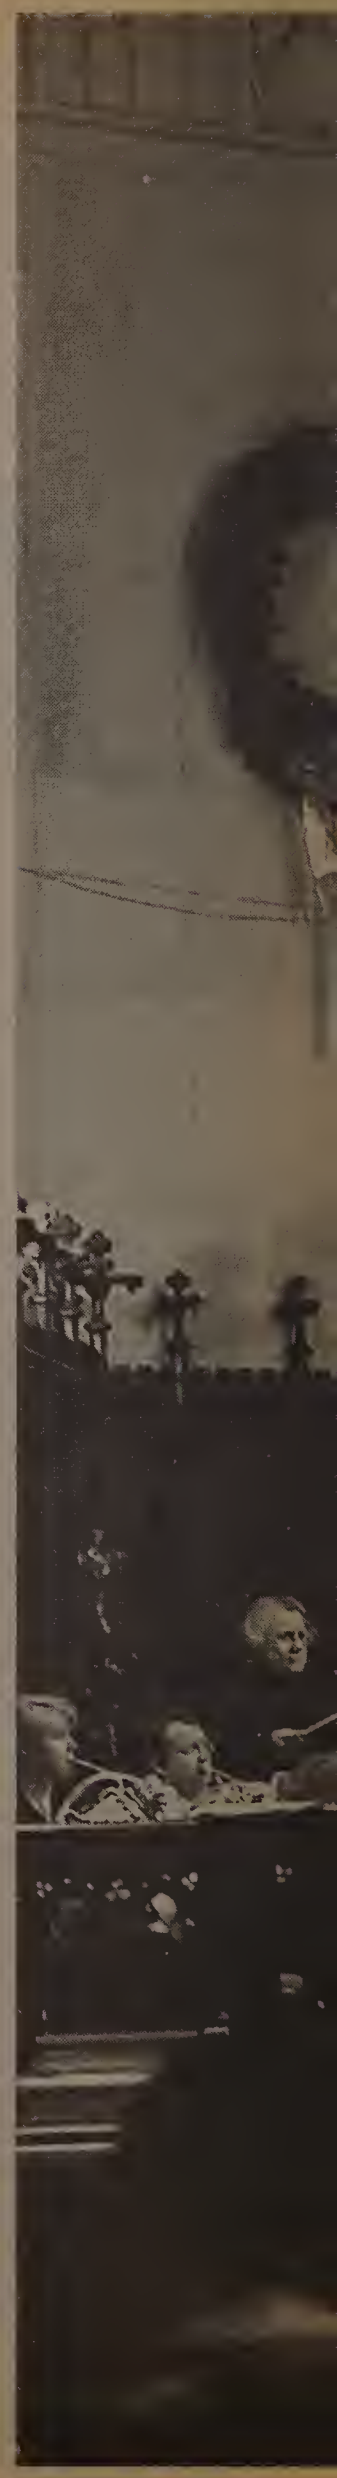
Which brings us back to free lunches. While the Emmanuel service does challenge conventional economics, it does not belie it. The musicians work for far less than union scale (religious dispensation, I guess). But they too must eat, if less well than many of us. Thus contributions—either to the church or Emmanuel Music itself—are devoutly to be wished. They are not, however, mandatory, and no one will guilt trip you if you don't give. Unless, of course, you become addicted to these Sunday mornings, as I have. Then, understandably, you're fair game.

What Else?

The organ music fairly shakes the place.

The assistant conductor is Pulitzer Prize-winning composer John Harbison, whose music is sometimes worked into the service.

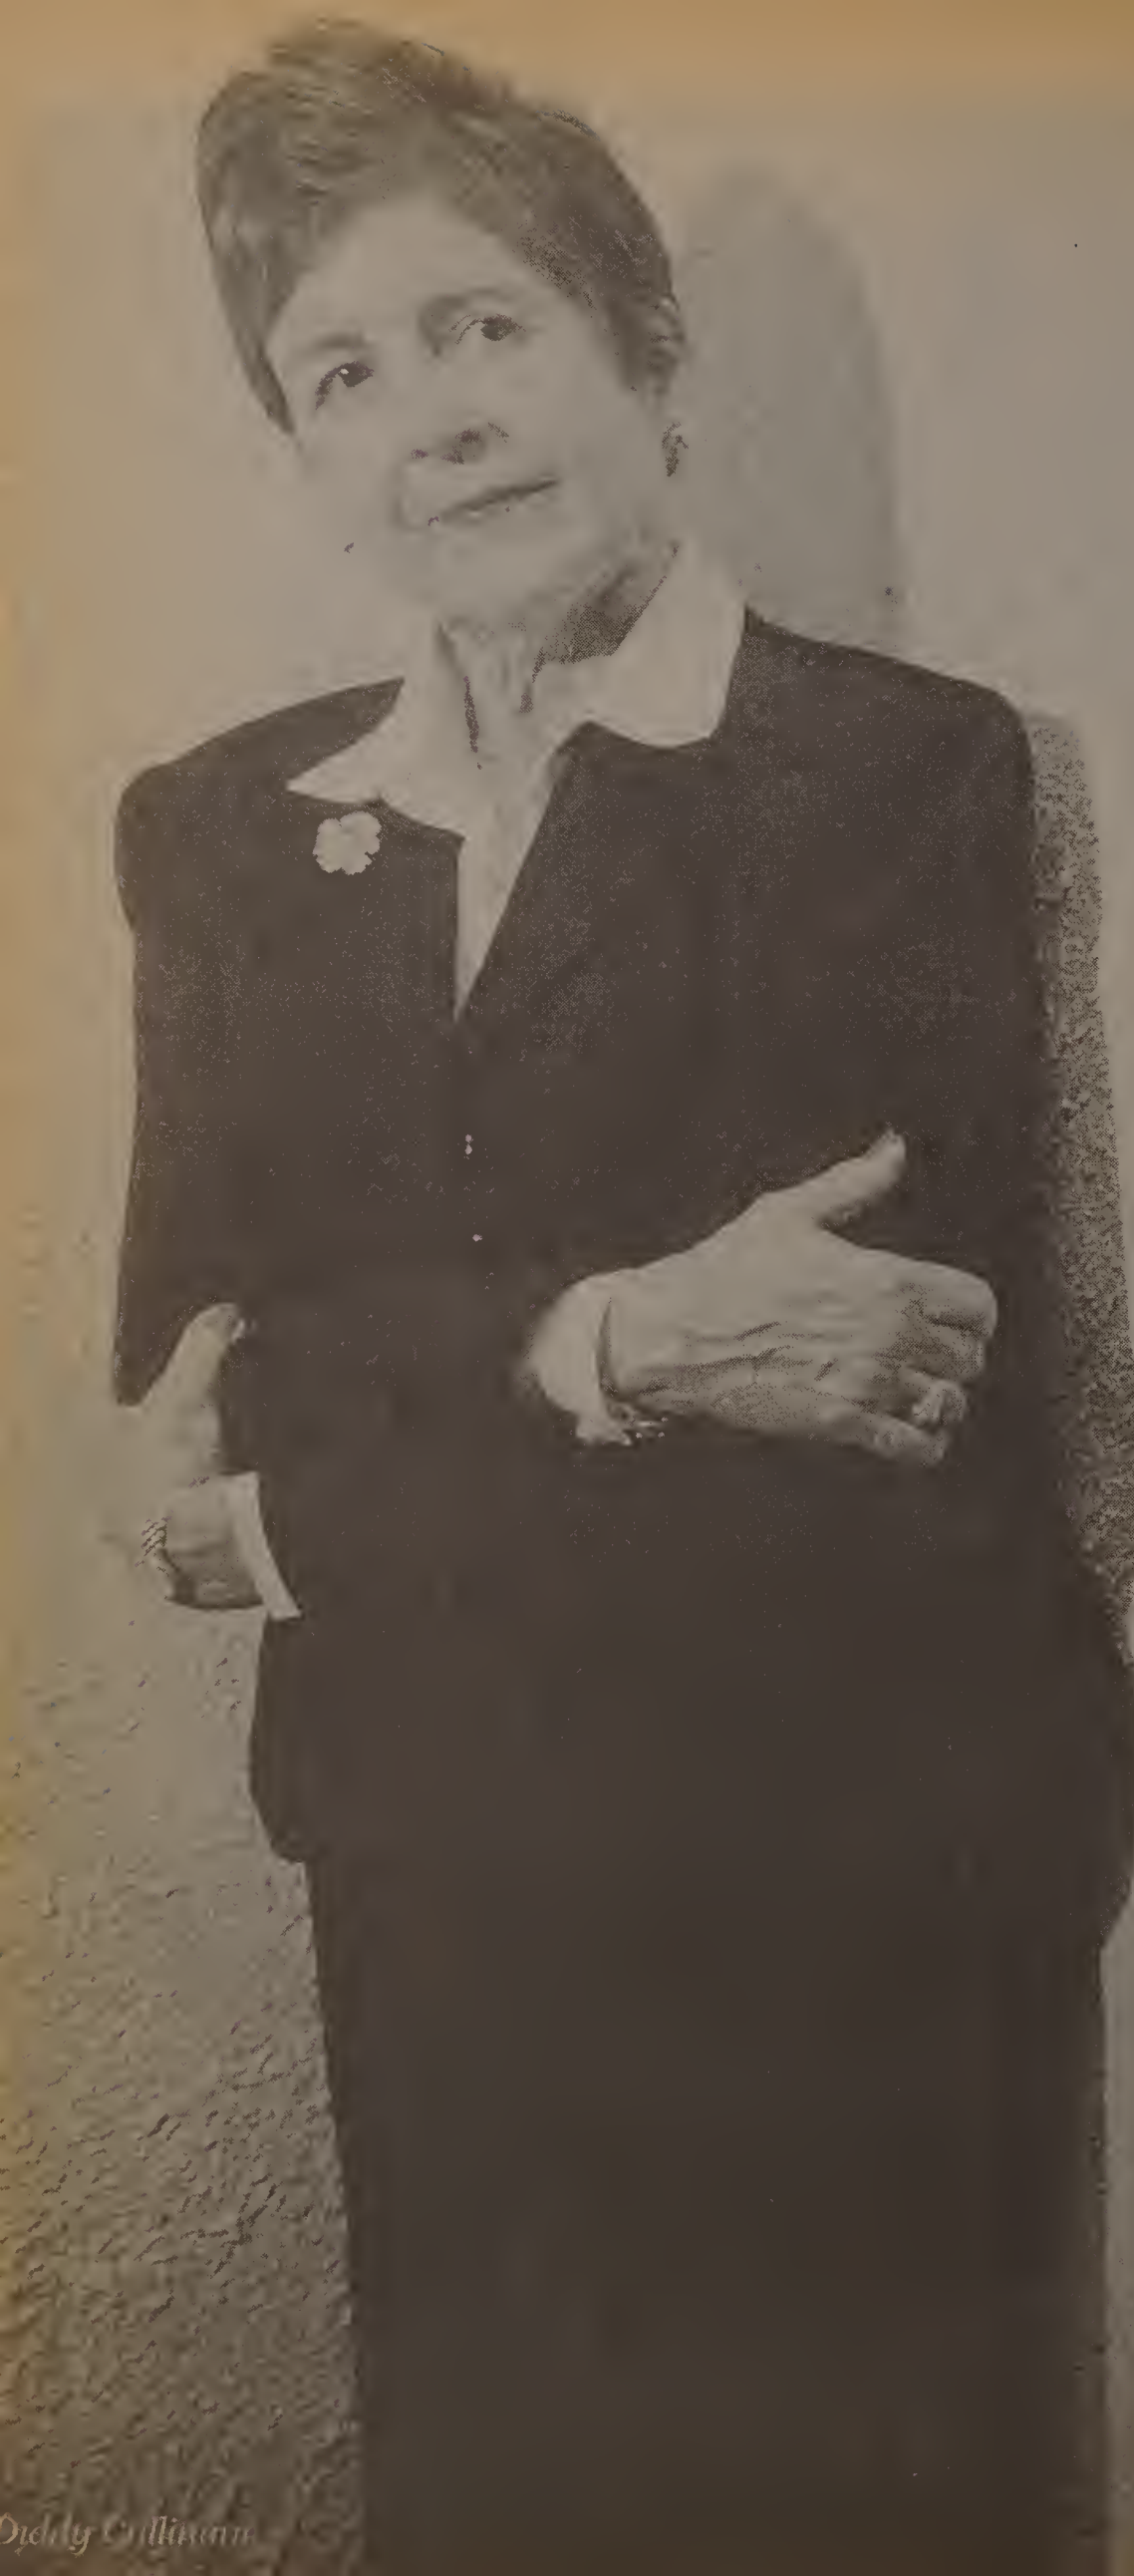
The Emmanuel orchestra varies some from week to week, but always scores and often astonishes, featuring local legends like Peggy Pearson on oboe, Julia Skolnick on flute.



The singing soars; from the chorus have come careers such as Sanford Sylvan's.

The cantata is printed in English and German in the program, which also features commentaries on the music that are often revelations. ("The chorale tune 'Vom Himmel hoch,' one of the most beloved of the chorales," read Craig Smith's note on Part II of the Christmas Oratorio, "leads us into the gorgeous slumber aria for alto flute and strings; notice how the flute hovers above the alto voice like a halo.")

There's a very friendly coffee hour after the closing organ solo.



And after it all, you can still get home in time to watch sports on TV, your spirit relieved by the fact that Emmanuel always plays splendidly on Sunday, even when the Patriots or Celtics don't. ✦

They're the WOMEN You Can't Say No To

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

PERHAPS BECAUSE THEY don't take no for an answer.

Instead of ladies who lunch, they're ladies who launch—capital campaigns, outreach programs, fundraising efforts. Rather than belonging to clubs, they belong to boards of trustees.

They're women who make a difference in the community, who improve life for countless people they've never met and who will never know them. They give prodigiously—not just money, but time, energy, creativity and passion. They get their friends involved and recruit family members, working tirelessly for the causes they believe in, and because they do, Boston, and the world in general, is a better place.

A recent study showed that Massachusetts trails many less affluent states in terms of charitable giving, and the constant call for volunteers from the non-profit sector clearly indicates the need for more involvement from the rest of us.

The eight women profiled here are examples to be admired and emulated. There may be more like them, but there can never be enough

Photographs By Dana Smith

Diddy Cullinane is no checkbook philanthropist.

Although she and her husband, John, a pioneer in the computer industry, have given away millions to charity, it's her contribution of time and energy—as an organizer, fundraiser and volunteer for various causes—that puts her in the pantheon of women who make a difference.

A Boston native, she was raised by her widowed mother, whose job with the Department of Public Health not only supported the family but served as an example of community service for her daughter to follow. Parochial school, as well, instilled a strong sense of duty to others in Cullinane, who studied education at what is now UMass Boston and then worked as a teacher in the Boston public schools.

"A teaching background is extremely helpful," she says, "because it develops skills—organization, leadership—in ways that you don't even realize when you're doing it."

In raising her two children—one of whom is now in medical school, while the other works for BankBoston—Cullinane (who was christened Agnes and nicknamed early on) was active as a volunteer and a trustee at the schools they attended. Gradually, she became increasingly active with Catholic Charities, the philanthropic arm of the Archdiocese of Boston, where she did fundraising, public relations, event planning and community outreach, and where she was eventually asked to join the board of trustees. In 1989, her community involvement led her to form Black and White Boston Coming Together—an organization devoted to promoting racial harmony. In addition to job and scholarship programs, the group holds a fundraising golf tournament—Black & White on Green—and sponsors a breakfast series to encourage dialogue between black and white business owners.

She is the former vice chairman of the Boston Public Library Foundation, where she developed an innovative creative writing and design program linking the library to Boston's public schools and helped to create an annual gala that has raised $1.2 million. She is also an overseer of the Museum of Fine Arts and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (where she and her husband are co-chairing next fall's Opening Night gala), and she's actively involved with the John F. Kennedy Library Foundation and the Boston Ballet. In the past year, the Cullinanes established a charitable foundation to handle their generous giving.

As for the dizzying round of fundraisers that crowds the calendar, she says, "My husband and I attend as many events as we can, but unfortunately, we can't go to everything we'd like to.

"More importantly, though, I can't say enough how valuable it is to do something in the way of community service. I know a lot of bored people, and if they knew how rewarding it is to volunteer for something they believed in, there'd be long lines for applicants. They'd still have time to travel or play golf or whatever, but they'd find that it would enlarge their lives in ways they couldn't imagine."

Frances Moseley

Joan Parker

At some point, everyone who knows Frances Moseley has asked a question like: "Where does she get the energy?" "How does she find the time?" and "Does she ever slow down?"

The president and CEO of the Boys and Girls Clubs of Boston—a full-time (and then some) position—she also serves on the board of the Wang Center, the New England Aquarium, and P.N.C. Bank (a major lender to minority businesses). She's also a supporter and former board member of the Huntington Theater, Beth Israel/Deaconess Hospital, the Big Sister Association and the Judge Baker Children's Center, and she's active with the United Way, which is run by her friend and fellow human dynamo, Marion Heard.

In addition, Moseley and her husband, Bud, a former banker who is the vice president of an executive search firm, are relentlessly social, attending an estimated 80 fundraising events during the year and budgeting 20 percent of their annual income to charity. Although she tries to be fairly selective and not to spread herself too thin, she's an active participant on roughly a dozen committees to plan major fundraising events every year.

"Fortunately, Bud and I share the same value system and commitment to the community," she says. "It's important, especially as the head of an organization that looks for support, that I be supportive of other causes, too."

Born in Cleveland, she was raised in Washington, D.C., where her father, a prominent physician, took an enormous pay cut to serve as the head of the dermatology department at Howard University.

"My community service mindset grew out of his example," she says.

At Northfield Mount Hermon, a boarding school in western Massachusetts, she was one of three black girls and recalls those years as "not the happiest time in my life." However, the school stressed leadership—a quality she embodies to the nth degree—and today, she says, "I give a lot of time and money to Northfield, so that other African-American students there might have less of an isolated and lonely experience than I had."

After graduating from the University of Denver, she came to Boston in 1972—"to bite the bullet and get some secretarial skills at Katherine Gibbs, because those were the only job opportunities available back then." (She has since delivered the school's commencement address.)

After starting out as a secretary at the Boston Company, she began to move up the corporate ladder, eventually becoming an executive in retail marketing for John Hancock. At the same time, she became deeply entrenched in various civic and charitable efforts, and in 1992, she was offered a chance to combine her vocation and her avocation by taking the top job at the Boys and Girls Clubs.

"I think it's really important to contribute as much as possible," she says.

BISHOP'S PUB

An English pub in an Irish town. A cozy warm room with a jukebox filled with a perfect mix from today's current hits to the Motown years. Inviting to all, come down and let the Bishop show you some hospitality.

All Venues Are Available For Private Functions Of Any Kind

"I want this to be a better world for the next generation."

Her own son, Gavin, is a student at Belmont Hill and recently hosted his first co-ed party.

"I was tearing my hair out," his mother admitted, "but I guess he's starting early in the Moseley party tradition."

COMMUNITY ACTIVISM AND PHILanthropy are Joan Parker's fourth career.

The wife of best-selling novelist Robert B. Parker, creator of the Spenser series, she was raised in Swampscott and went to Colby College, graduating in 1954 before going to work as a service rep at New England Tel. & Tel.

"I answered complaints and sold colored telephones," she says. "I once sold four phones to a woman who lived in a one-bedroom apartment. I guess she wanted a different colored phone for each corner."

In 1956, Parker married her husband, and their first son, David, was born four years later, followed shortly by Daniel. While raising her children, she earned a master's degree in education at Tufts.

"I was on the cusp of the women's movement, knowing that it was okay to do other things beside stay at home," she recalls. Charity, however, "wasn't a part of our lives, because we were poor."

While her husband's literary ambitions slowly bore fruit, Parker pursued her own career, first as an early childhood professor at Endicott College and Tufts, and then as the director of curriculum and instruction for the state's Department of Education.

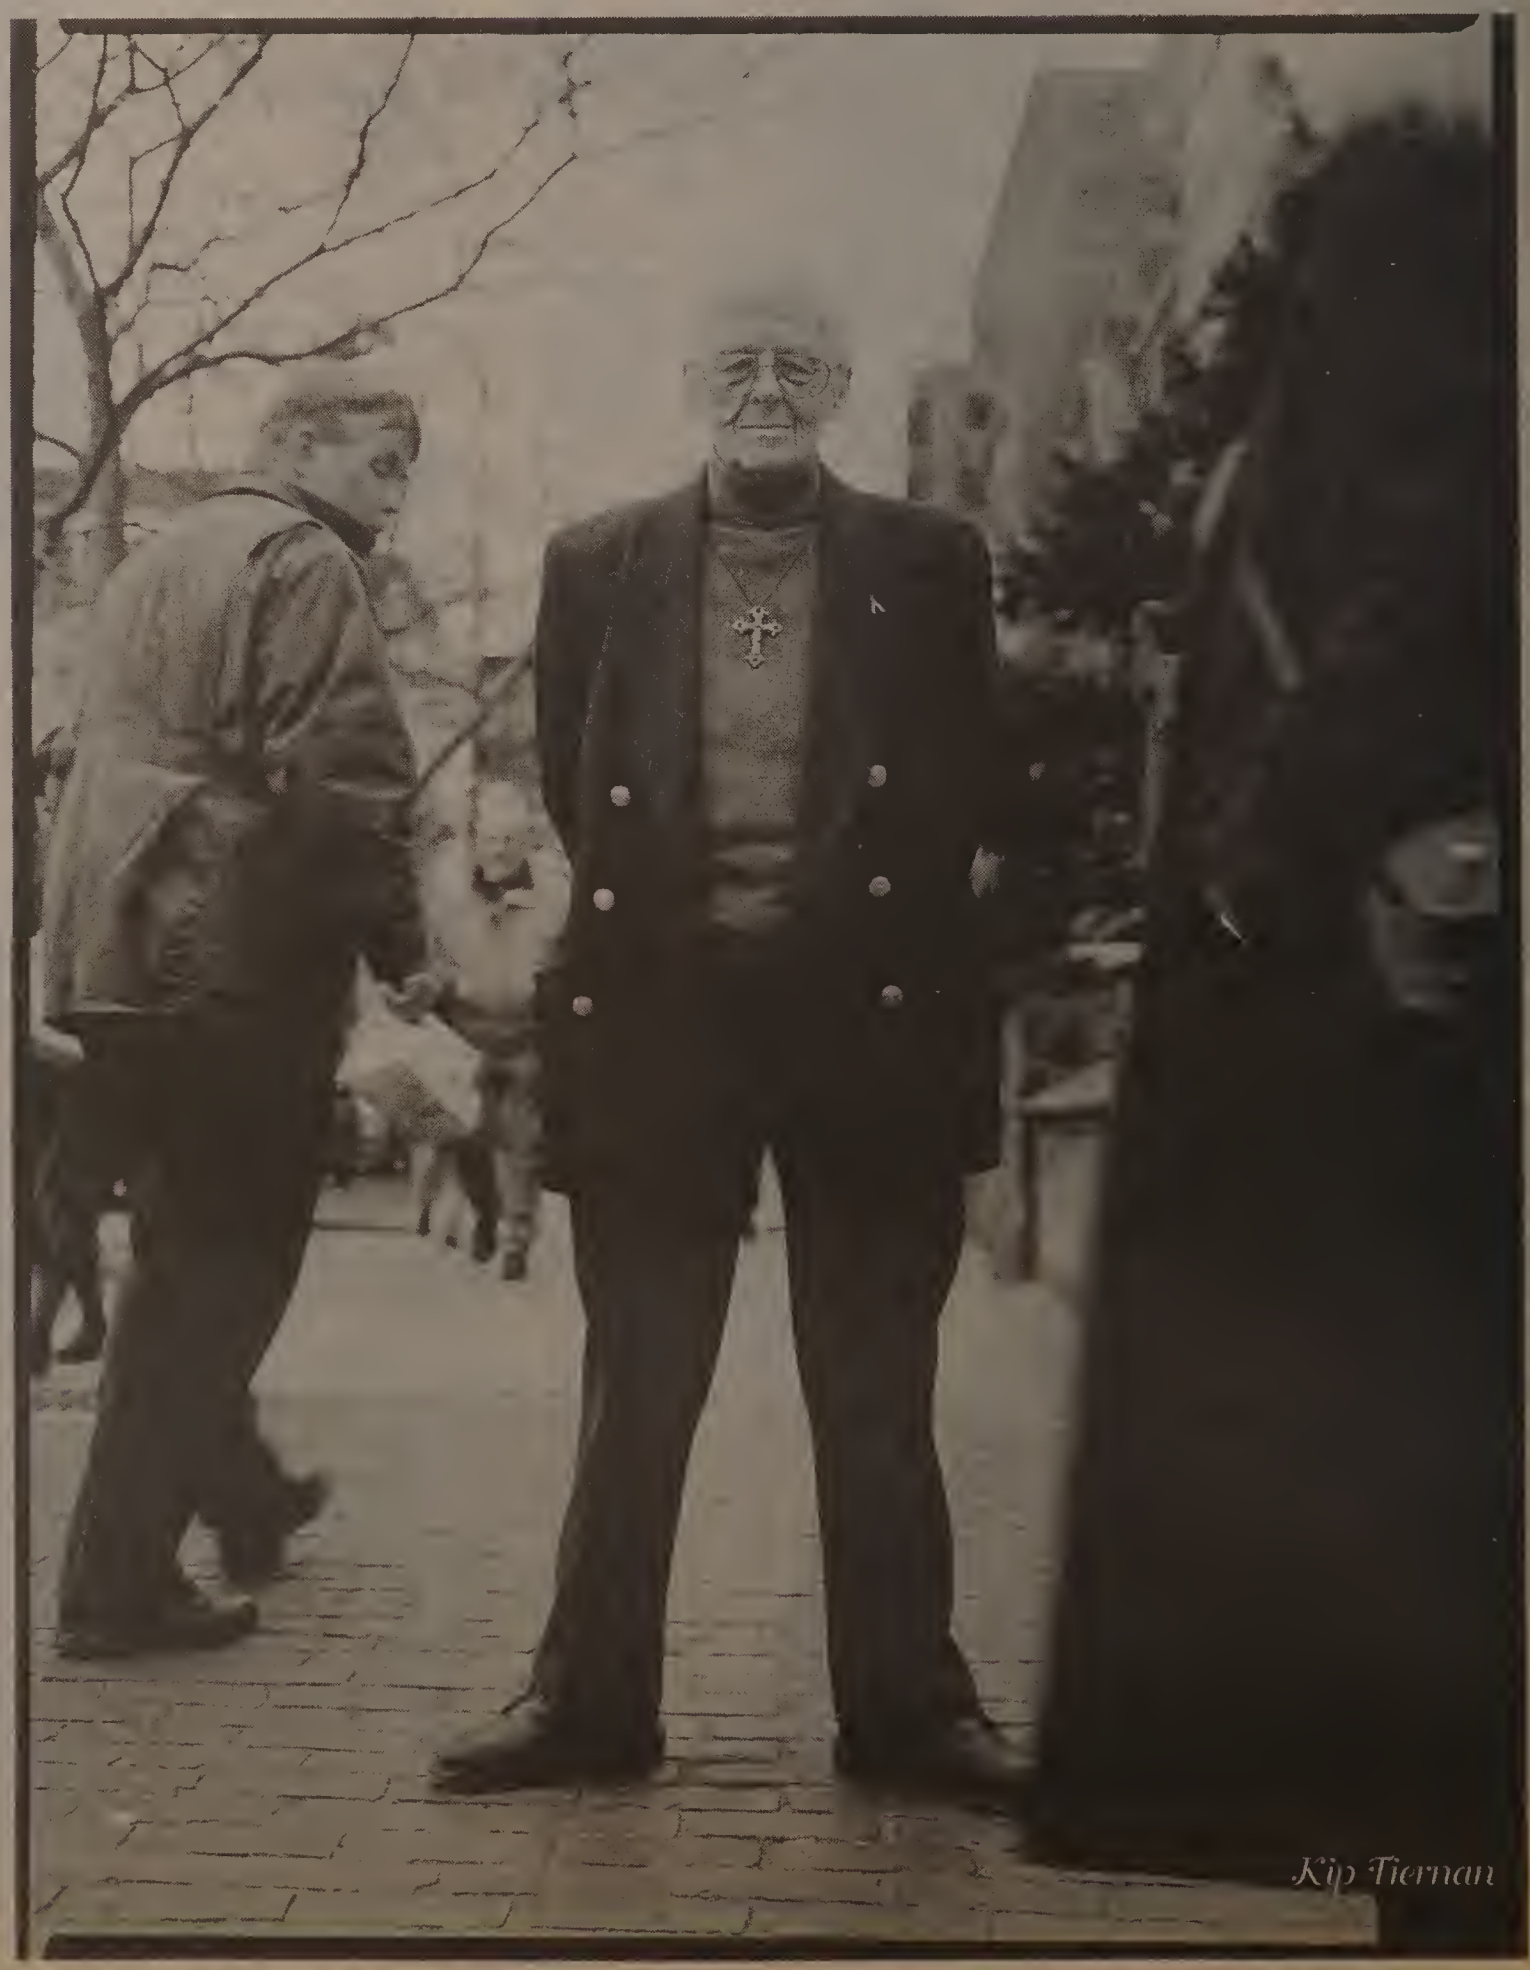
In 1985, she co-wrote a Spenser script that earned her more than her annual salary, and she decided to take early retirement and concentrate on her husband's TV series. Three weeks later, the show was cancelled, and the Parkers formed their own production company.

"We spent a lot of time in L.A., experiencing the hideousness of the scene there, and we wrote four original Spenser movies for the Lifetime network, which, if you haven't seen them, don't bother. They're awful."

That experience temporarily soured her on writing and producing, but she and her husband are now inking a deal with another network. But it's her work with Community Servings—which delivers meals to home-bound AIDS patients—that's become her consuming interest.

"Both of my kids are gay, so I'm especially sensitive to those issues," she says. "I got involved when I was producing a dance performance for one of my sons. Michela Larson (the restaurateur) suggested that I do it as a fundraiser. She was the one who told me about Community Servings."

Parker has been on the group's board for six years, currently chairs its capital campaign (which is close to its $1.5 million goal) and regularly pitches in at the office, answering phones, conducting interviews and doing whatever else needs to be done.



In addition, she is a trustee of the American Repertory Theater and Dance Umbrella, serves on an advisory board for Shared Heart, and supports such organizations as Love Lives On, the New England Aquarium, the Boston Ballet and the Gloucester AIDS Project. She and her husband frequently lend their names to fundraising efforts by other worthwhile causes.

"Community Servings is my new career," she says. "I love the immediacy of it, the concept that it's grass-roots and not bogged down in bureacracy."

Apparently, the feeling is mutual. Community Servings' executive director Dede Ketover says, "We wouldn't be here without Joanie."

Kip Tiernan IS A SOCIAL activist of the militant, take-no-prisoners, 1960s stripe. In her relentless crusade to help the poor and the homeless, she has protested, lobbied, advocated, fundraised, rabble-roused and made a general nuisance of herself with the same degree of conviction as Ghandi, Che Guevara, or Joan of Arc.

A native of Connecticut, she was orphaned as a child and raised by her grandmother. Always unorthodox, Tiernan took flying lessons at the age of 16 and became a jazz aficionado as a young woman.

She arrived in Boston in her early 20's and embarked upon a career in advertising, writing mail order catalogues, direct mail pieces and 30-second spots. She also applied her writing skills to articles for the Catholic left, which appeared in such publications as the Boston Globe and Boston After Dark.

Through her parish, Tiernan discovered St. Philip's/Warwick House, which was involved in the civil rights and anti-war movements, and she eventually joined the team ministry, because, as she likes to put it, "Poor people need advertising, too."

Since then, she hasn't looked back.

On Easter Day 1974, Tiernan founded Rosie's Place, the country's first drop-in and emergency shelter for women, which has grown to include meals, extended stay and permanent housing, and a wide variety of services for one of the most underserved segments of the population.

Through the strength of her convictions, she has managed to attract celebrity supporters like Lily Tomlin, despite politically freighted rhetoric that can, at times, sound strident, apocalyptic and overly pessimistic.

"...We are in a time of dying," she wrote recently. "...It is theologically a time of grief...Our system has begun to unravel."

But whether or not one agrees with her conclusions, no one knows more about the plight of the dispossessed than she does, or does more about it.

In addition to founding Rosie's Place, Tiernan was a founder of the Boston Food Bank and the Boston Women's Fund, Health Care for the Homeless and Community Works. In 1980, she established the Poor People's United Fund—a "spare change" funding source for grassroots organizations involved with homelessness, hunger and access to justice—and she currently serves as its co-director. In 1990, she established the Ethical Policy Institute, which is devoted to political analysis, economics and community activism, and in addition to her frequent speaking engagements, she teaches as an adjunct professor at UMass.

Most recently, she completed a protest fast in response to a homeless man found dead after a long, freezing cold night on the Boston Common.

"Why do I fast?" she asked. "For the same reasons I fasted in 1990: for atonement...for redemption...for repentance...for resistance....for hope....I have no illusions. I have no agenda. What I do have is hope. And faith. That somehow we will all make it through the long, dark night of despair together."

Amen.

Barbara Jordan

IN MANY PEOPLE'S MINDS, Barbara Jordan will forever be associated with Princess Diana.

Jordan, who owns the women's boutique, Bjoux, on Newbury Street, bought three of Diana's dresses at the charity auction at Christie's last summer. Jordan's idea was to support the princess' philanthropic efforts and generate some buzz for her store by displaying the gowns, and then donate them to three of her own favorite charities, thereby doubling the amount of good they'd do.

Jordan gave away two of the dresses and was helping to plan a gala where the third dress would be auctioned off when history intervened. Diana was killed in Paris, and the gala—which proceeded after some soul-searching by its organizers—raised more than $240,000.

"The last thing I wanted was all the publicity about me," Jordan says. "It was all very strange and unnerving."

A native of Washington, D.C., Jordan went to Skidmore and came to Boston to attend secretarial school at Katherine Gibbs. After marrying investment adviser Jerry Jordan in 1965, she worked for a year as a secretary at Harvard and then became a stay-at-home mother to her two sons, now 31 and 24.

"We settled in Wayland," she explains, "and while my kids were growing up, I did everything from hospital volunteering to the Junior League, which really introduced me to community service."

In 1995, Jordan and her husband split.

"I think going through a divorce made me more sensitized to other people's pain. My guiding philosophy in life really is 'There but for the grace of God go I,' and I wanted to assert my own identity, not to be known just as so-and-so's wife, or ex-wife."

With the time available to her as the divorced mother of grown children, and the comfortable assets of the divorce settlement, she stepped up her charitable involvement. Today, she's on the board of the Family Center in Somerville, a corporator and former board member of the MSPCC, and she sponsors forums for the Boston Women's Fund. She's also an active supporter of Community Servings, Rosie's Place, the Pine Street Inn, the Boys and Girls Clubs (for whom she organized a major Halloween party), the United Way, the Gardner Museum, the New England Conservatory, the Wang Center, Martha's Vineyard Community Services and Vineyard House (a halfway house for women).

"I feel personally connected to family and women's issues, so I try to seek out some of the smaller groups that don't get a lot of recognition," she says. "I like direct service organizations, where the leadership is personally committed."

In addition to her philanthropic and volunteer activities, she also helps to run her store, which she opened in 1996 with the same sort of take-charge, problem-solving attitude.

"I'm six feet tall, so I've always shopped in specialty stores, but a lot of them are closing. And while I like clothes, I don't like shopping. So I opened Bjoux for women like me."

As for the now indelible association with Princess Diana, Jordan says, "I sympathized with and admired how she was trying to pull her life together, her charitable efforts, and her life with her children. Being identified with her is fine by me."

THE OPERA MIGHT NOT BE OVER 'TIL THE FAT LADY sings, but at the Boston Lyric Opera, t couldn't begin without its formidable board president, Lee Day Gillespie.

To many opera buffs, she's the individual most responsible for keeping the art form alive and well in Boston, although she prefers to remain behind the scenes.

"I don't chair galas, and I don't stick my neck out for recognition," she says. "I love what I do, as long as I don't have to socialize a lot. I'd rather go to a rehearsal than court donors at a dinner party."

Such sentiments are unsurprising from a no-nonsense woman who's always been something of a maverick.

Raised in a patrician part of Connecticut, she inherited her father's strong sense of moral obligation to others, as well as his entrepreneurial streak.

"When I was a girl, I ran a poultry farm with 5,000 laying hens, and I shipped eggs to hotels in New York City," she recalls. "Before we ever had our driver's licenses, my brother and I had a trucking company. We drove double-clutch trucks, bringing feed for livestock from upstate New York."

At boarding school during World War II, she was put in charge of the machinery, because she knew how to fix a motor.

"The point is that when I have an idea, I'm not afraid to venture forth and do it," she says. "I've always expected to do interesting things, and I always have."

After studying biochemistry at Wellesley, she married and moved to Finland, returning to Connecticut a year later. Eventually, she and her husband (now ex) settled in Concord with their four kids, and she volunteered for Community Chest, the forerunner of the United Way.

"Going door-to-door was a useful thing I could do with a baby carriage," she says. Her community involvement—in Concord, "a town where everybody went to town meeting and voiced an opinion"—honed her leadership skills, and a love of opera—"a combination of all the arts, with sound, visuals and performance"—led her to become a trustee of the Opera Company of Boston in the late 1960s.

The National Opera Institute in Washington eventually asked her to join their board, and Gillespie served as its president for seven "enormously gratifying" and successful years, during which she traveled endlessly and helped to broaden the organization's scope.

Feeling the lack of opera in Boston, she became involved with the B.L.O. through its former board chairman, Hod Irvine, in 1992, and she's served as its board president since 1994, helping to turn it into a respected company that mounts three productions per year.

In October, for her 70th birthday, Gillespie announced a $500,000 challenge grant to the B.L.O., which she is careful to refer to as an "investment" rather than a "donation," reflecting her businesslike attitude toward philanthropy.

Most of her giving, however, is anonymous, and although she's a trustee of the New England Conservatory, the American Repertory Theater, the Nantucket Conservation Foundation and Nantucket Cottage Hospital, she seeks and receives no credit for most of her contributions.

"Ninety-five percent of what I do, people have no idea about, which is fine," she says. "But if you needed an Arab lawyer in New Haven on 12 hours' notice, I could probably find you one."

Helen Spaulding is the embodiment of the motto: "To whom much is given, much is expected."

A resident of Manchester and Back Bay, she is a trustee of Children's Hospital, the New England Aquarium, the Museum of Science, the Woods Hole Research Center and theWang Center (which her son, Josiah, runs). She is chairman of the board of the Boston Foundation, sits on two advisory boards at the Kennedy School and one at Brandeis, is a former board member of Boston University, Georgetown University and Shawmut Bank, and avidly supports such causes as the United Way and the World Wildlife Fund, being a former board member of both.

"I'm not what you'd call a philanthropist or a major donor," she says modestly. "What I've given is my time and my love and my interest."

Her financial adviser would beg to differ, saying that she gives more away than most of his clients, many of whom have more money.

Born in New York, Spaulding was raised there and in Washington, D.C., and at boarding school, she was required to do community service, starting her career as a volunteer at a "well-baby clinic."

"Our headmistress at Foxcroft was a real inspiration," she said. "Her name was Charlotte Nolan and she was a wonderful example."

At age 20, Spaulding married, living in Washington before moving to Boston in 1957, when her husband joined the law firm of Bingham, Dana and Gould. Visitors to the Kennedy Library can see photos of the Spauldings as attendants in Jacqueline Bouvier's wedding to John F. Kennedy ("She was in my wedding, too—our parents were great friends"), and she was, similarly, wed to a man who was devoted to public service and ran (unsuccessfully) for US Senate (ironically, against Ted Kennedy, in 1970) and for attorney general (in 1974).

"Campaigning for my husband, I saw a lot of people in need, and I ended up becoming the world's greatest volunteer."

In the early '70s, she served as the volunteer chair of B.U.'s School of Social Work under Hubie Jones, and after her husband, a liberal Republican, died, she returned to the Democratic party, traveling with Kitty Dukakis when her husband made his 1988 bid for the presidency.

All three of Spaulding's sons, likewise, have inherited their mother's sense of public duty— George, known as Jeb, as a Democratic state senator in Vermont, Josiah Jr., known as Joe, as head of the Wang Center for the Performing Arts and Alexander, or Sandy, as a lawyer and venture capitalist.

"The only paid job I've had was when my husband died, in 1983," she says. "I took over his position as president of the Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital (which he had founded) for two years, before selling it to Mass General."

An avid snorkeler, sailor and environmentalist, Spaulding recently returned from a skin-diving expedition to Polynesia but manages to schedule her trips in between her other obligations.

"People ought to be very generous and participate in the world where it needs their help—the poor, the arts, the non-profit sector. Once they become involved, they have a good time. It's not a chore. It's a way of life, and it's very enjoyable to me."

A native of Washington, D.C., she was the fifth and youngest child of Mordecai Johnson—the son of a former slave, the first African-American president of Howard University and a legendary educator who influenced such major figures as Martin Luther King Jr.

He exerted an enormous influence on his daughter, as well, who recalls that while delivering a commencement address, "He kept repeating two themes: Train yourself and give back to the community."

That she's done spectacularly. As president and chief executive officer of the Boston Foundation—one of the oldest and largest community foundations in the country—she oversees an endowment of more than $500 million and more than $21 million in annual grant distributions to non-profit organizations. Under her tenure, the foundation has grown significantly, broadening its role in the community and initiating groundbreaking efforts like the Boston Persistent Poverty Project, the first qualitative survey of poverty ever done in the city.

A graduate of Northfield Mount Hermon, Jones went to Wellesley College and then earned a master's degree in musicology at Columbia. The mother of two sons (now grown), she worked as a real estate broker and as a music librarian at MIT, before joining the Boston Foundation in 1974. She's had the top job there since 1985, and the foundation, which supports a multitude of programs for the poor and the homeless and has begun aggresive funding of the arts, serves as a model throughout the country and the world.

In addition to that position, Jones is a member of the advisory committee on public charities of the Office of the Attorney General, a board member of the Council on Foundations, Fleet Bank and the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, a vice chair of the National Civic League and Public Radio International. She is a trustee of the Boston Athenaeum, the Kettering Foundation and the WGBH Educational Foundation, chair of the Committee to Visit Memorial Church at Harvard University and vice chair of Northfield Mount Hermon School. Over the past decade, her contributions have been recognized by numerous colleges and universities, which have bestowed honorary degrees on her, among them: Tufts, Emmanuel, Suffolk, Wheelock and UMass Boston.

"I grew up on the Howard campus," she says. "I saw women of great accomplishments, women who headed departments."

She can count herself as one of them, and her father, no doubt, would be extremely proud. ✦

How Chris Schlesinger went from shy surfer to world famous chef

BY IAN DONNIS

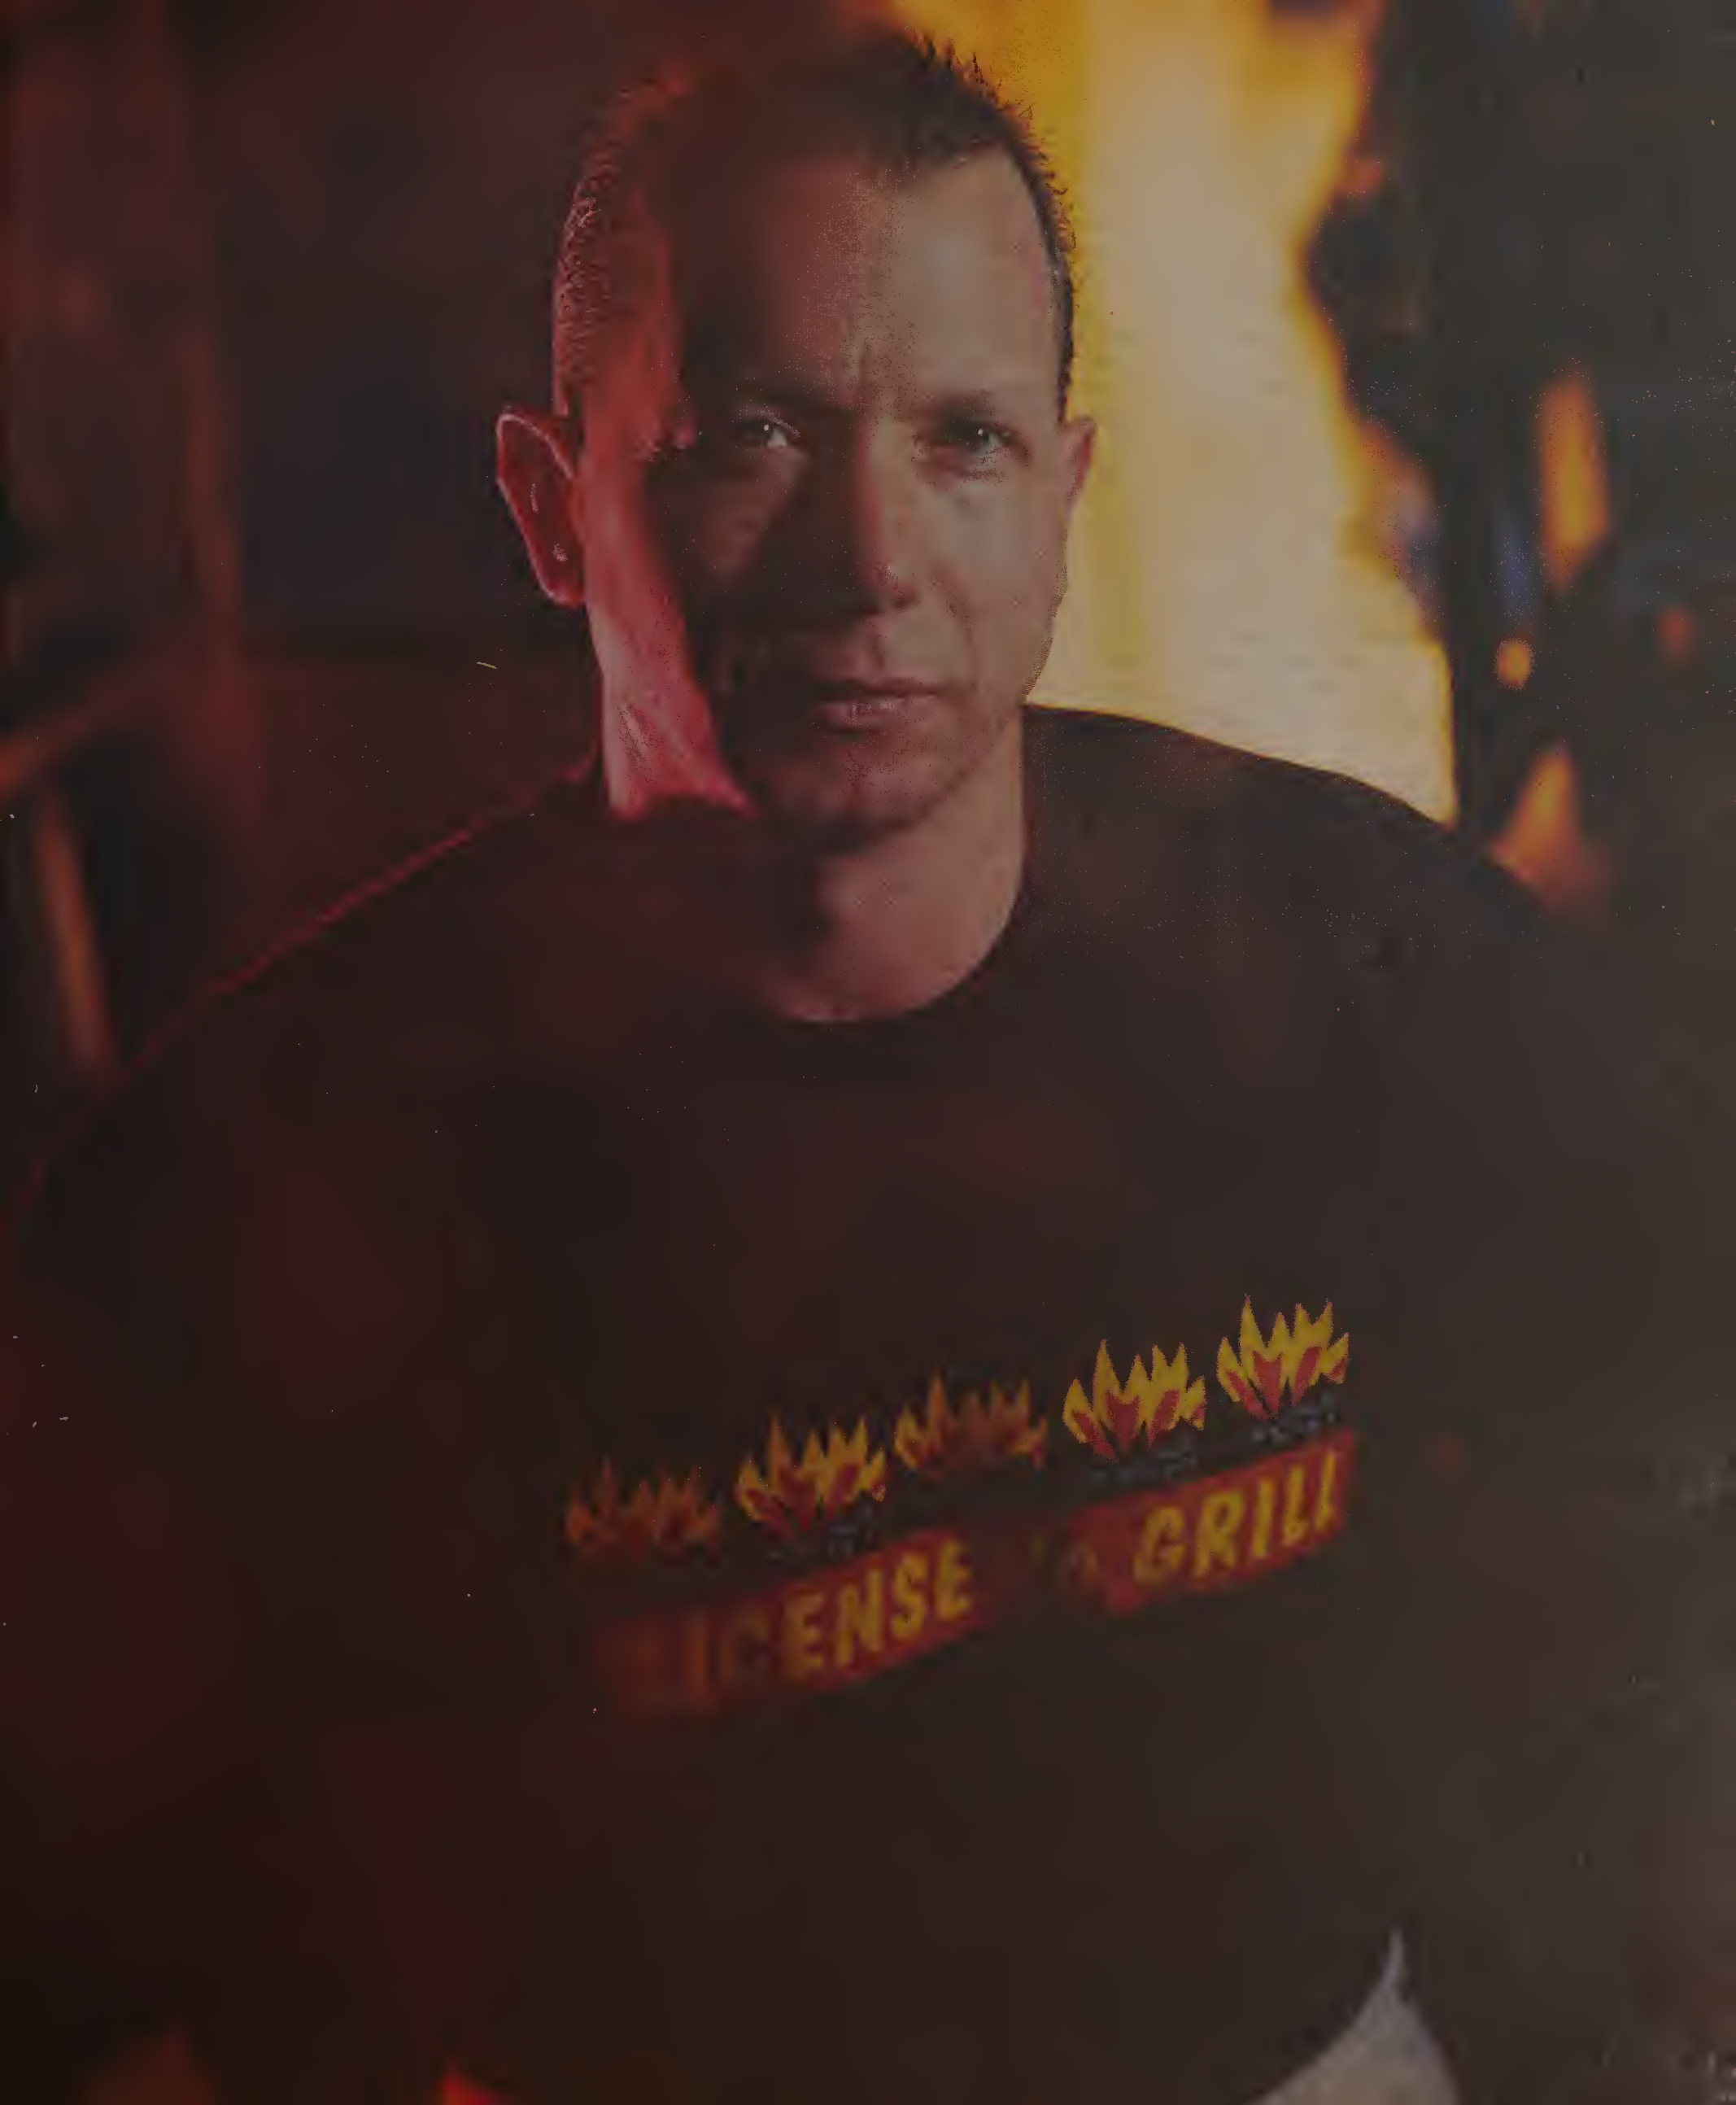
Photograph By Steven Edson

OUT IN NAPA VALLEY FOR A RECENT TEACHING stint at the Culinary Institute of America's California outpost, Chris Schlesinger took in some fine food, including a stop at the rarefied French Laundry. But the meal that lingered in Schlesinger's mind was a feast of barbequed oversized oysters, washed back by a few frosty Sierra Nevadas, at a funky fishhouse named Tony's.

The relative level of fascination goes a long way in illustrating the personality and motivation of Schlesinger—one-time college drop-out, dishwasher, surf bum and wayward member of a famous family—who found remarkable success by following his bliss on a souped-up quest for unpretentious fun.

Schlesinger, the chef/owner of the East Coast Grill in Cambridge's Inman Square, said he would have been content to have had a neighborhood restaurant when former partner Cary Wheaton and he opened the place in 1986. But Schlesinger's distinctive and intensely flavored fare, which was inspired by his own extended travels in the equatorial spice zone, quickly became a hit and continues to pack the house.

At a time when some uber-chefs are creating culinary empires of multiple restaurants, Schlesinger went the other way—refocusing on the East Coast in 1996 by tripling its size, adding an oyster bar and raising the emphasis on local seafood—while spreading his Big Flavors gospel through a smart and accessible string of cookbooks.



Nowadays, Schlesinger, who was named two years ago by the James Beard Foundation as the best chef in the Northeast, has emerged as perhaps Boston's most visible culinary ambassador through his restaurant, cookbooks and dozens of television appearances. Not bad for a guy who, at 18, bolted from Northeastern University and wound up washing dishes.

"I'm always scared I'm going to be found out," said Schlesinger, a self-effacing 41-year-old Virginia Beach native who speaks with a touch of his Southern roots. But his ardor shows while displaying the East Coast Grill's new Polynesian Lava Lounge function room, which features bamboo wainscotting, a giant mural of a volcano (with embedded red lights to simulate the flow of lava) and a post-modern pupu platter, a high/low amalgam of such treats as smoked duck leg, stuffed quail, coconut-crusted shrimp skewers, grilled pineapple and de rigueur ribs. Now uncompromising, Schlesinger says, "I'll put our pupu platter up against anybody's."

This is the essential Schlesinger, a man who—even though he's benefited from the rise of the chef as celebrity—refuses to bow to cooking as an art form, yet who is serious and competitive about having a good time.

"In terms of work, he doesn't like to be bored, so he tries to make everything as much fun as possible," said John 'Doc' Willoughby, who provides the voice for Schlesinger's affable personality in the five cookbooks they've co-authored. "I think that's his approach to food, too. He's always looking for something exciting, different and adventurous. He's willing to take all kinds of chances, and it always works out."

Willoughby tells of how Schlesinger and he were stuck in a seemingly dull truckstop of a city in southern Malaysia while researching Big Flavors of the Hot Sun (William Morrow and Co., 1994). "If it was up to me, maybe we would have stayed in the hotel bar," Willoughby said. "But he wanted to walk around. After a few hours, we stumbled into an alleyway, which was kind of like a wild circus. There were people selling weird potions, performing magic tricks and selling strange food. We would have never found it if he hadn't pushed us to go out there," and some street food, minus the fermented fish paste, was adapted for the book into Spicy Hard-Cooked Eggs in Coconut Milk with Chiles.

The youngest of two children (big sister Susan is Cambridge's assistant city manager), Schlesinger became fascinated with live-fire grilling as a child of about six or seven. His father, Tom, who worked in public relations for the Rockefeller Foundation at colonial Willamsburg, was a stylish backyard griller. "He would check the wind, look at the sky, go through all this magical stuff," before proclaiming a triumph over the elements and another in a series of best-ever meals, Schlesinger recalled. "It was fun. You got to make a fire. When I got the opportunity to open a restaurant, that's what I wanted to do."

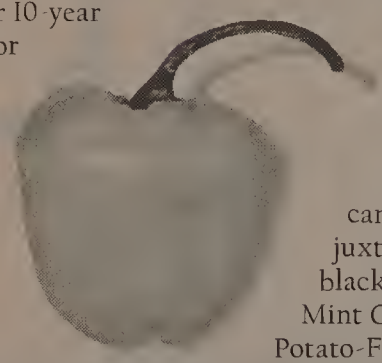
After drifting out of college, Schlesinger was less than thrilled when he was offered a dishwasher's job at Blue Petc's, a seafood joint in Virginia Beach. But his grandmother insisted that he take the job, and when the early evening's work of a monumental clean-up job turned into an all-night party with the staff, he was hooked on restaurant life.

Stemming from a well-connected lineage (the historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr. is his uncle, and the Schlesinger Library at Radcliffe College, which houses, among other things, a collection of 5,000 cookbooks, was inspired by his grandmother's work for women's rights), Schlesinger didn't win plaudits for his budding career in cooking. "When I started, my parents' friends were, like, 'The kid's a loser,'" he recalled. Eventually, his father impressed upon him the importance of education, and Schlesinger graduated from the Culinary Institute of America in upstate New York.

Mixing his nascent cooking skills with a love of surfing and tropical climes, Schlesinger intermittently worked at dozens of restaurants, including the Harvest in Harvard Square, while also exploring beaches in Barbados, Mexico, Central America and elsewhere. Initially excited by the emergence of nouvelle cuisine in the 1970s, he became disenchanted when a trend that at first was fresh and exciting became overly precious and stifling. Shifting again to beach bum mode, Schlesinger experienced a revelation in northern Costa Rica that would change his life.

A fisherman hauled a dorado from the sea, cut the fish into steaks and tossed them onto a grill. Grilling plaintains and making a relish from such tropical ingredients as mangoes, habanero chilis and cilantro, the fisherman served up a relaxed, yet intense meal with bright, bold flavors. This, thought Schlesinger, was what food should be all about.

The ultimate result was the East Coast Grill, which Schlesinger and Wheaton—his sister's best friend—opened in a former café in 1986. Adapting the lessons of his Costa Rican culinary guide and other informal mentors, Schlesinger created his own distinctive style of cooking, including the combining of fresh fruits and vegetables with spices and chili peppers to make salsas, chutneys and other "little dishes."



Despite heavy wafts of smoke from the oak-fed grill, the restaurant's noisy atmosphere, gusts of cold air from the door and other potential turnoffs, an enthusiastic following of customers quickly developed. Done up with a turquoise bar, yellow ceiling, Dali-esque lighting fixtures and a generous presence of decorative sea creatures, the East Coast continues to thrive as a festive extension of Schlesinger's fun-loving personality.

Similarly, the cookbook collaboration between Schlesinger and Willoughby, now senior editor for Cook's Illustrated in Brookline, exceeded expectations by distilling their gut interests for their debut, Thrill of the Grill, in 1990, through License to Grill, in 1997 (with plans for two more). Offering useful tips, quirky anecdotes and some challenging preparations, the books expand the typical universe of backyard chefs with inspiration for such dishes as grilled peaches with blue cheese and sweet balsamic glaze, or grilled chicken breasts with red cabbage slaw and cilantro-pecan pesto.

Success at the East Coast Grill begat Jake & Earl's, a next door take-out BBQ joint, and The Blue Room in Kendall Square. In 1996, Schlesinger and Wheaton sold The Blue Room, amicably ended their 10-year partnership, and Jake & Earl's gave way for the expanded East Coast Grill. Schlesinger and other investors helped Kenton Jacobs, pitmaster at Jake & Earl's, open Jake's Boss Barbeque in Jamaica Plain.

"I like all the things about one restaurant," Schlesinger said, including the concentrated personality of the place, and the sense of community with staff, neighbors, food purveyors and other restaurateurs—"the family of food," as he calls it.

The name of his restaurant notwithstanding, Schlesinger believes much of the East Coast's success stems from its West Coast-style linkage of real good food served in a casual atmosphere. Joining with other chefs in the mid-1980s to significantly raise Boston's culinary profile, Schlesinger also benefited serendipitously from the growing interest in grilling, spicy flavors and food that was exciting and fun—his very own personal trademarks. "I think we get a lot of credit because we're different and we're unique," he said, "and did some stuff that happened to have pretty good timing." By the time the East Coast opened, "This country's relationship with food exploded."

Schlesinger gained attention as the creator of Pasta from Hell, a basically inedible plate of fettucine bathed in a habanero pepper sauce, which was engineered to quiet the cravings of heat-seeking freaks for the next step in fiery food. The East Coast is also known for semi-annual Hotter than Hell nights, which feature an especially ferocious menu of super-spicy fare and campy humor (a creamsicle antidote for a $2 wimp charge, and a liability release form for those desiring the most excruciating dish).

But Schlesinger's signature style can be better seen in the geographic juxtaposition of tastes found in such blackboard specials as Arborio Rice & Mint Crusted Halibut Filet with Red Potato-Fennel-Roasted Tomato-Bacon Ragout, Preserved Lemon Relish & Rosemary-Black Olive Sauce, or Asian Spice Crusted Steelhead Trout and Taylor Bay Scallops with Pan Fried Lomein Noodles & Asian Vegetables, Scallion Slaw & Star Anise Vinaigrette.

"He's a creative genius," said Andy Husbands, chef/co-owner of Tremont 647 in the South End and the former executive chef at the East Coast Grill. Husbands has a friend, a sous-chef at one of Boston's best restaurants, who thought of Schlesinger as a hacker, until they worked together at a New York City cooking event. The friend was "completely blown away by how technically advanced he is," Husbands said, particularly since Schlesinger pulled it off in such a relaxed way.

A Cambridge bachelor with a summer home in Westport, Schlesinger's enthusiasms include professional wrestling, betting, pranks (such as calling friends and pretending to be a famous French chef or a New York Times food writer), traveling, gardening, hanging at the beach, fishing and "screwing off, basically," as he put it while talking over coffee on a recent afternoon at the East Coast.

But while he gains envious praise from best buddy Jimmy Burke for his track record in getting away from work, Schlesinger's nonchalance is balanced by his tendency as a hard worker with keen business acumen and a sense of activism. Among other roles, Schlesinger is a founding member of the national group Chefs 2000, which works with local farmers to sustain agriculture.

"Chris is self-deprecating in his way, and I disagree with him," said Steve Johnson, chef and co-owner of The Blue Room, who was a prep school classmate of Schlesinger's in Virginia. "He claims he would be a bum if he was not a restaurateur. I disagree with that. I think he could be successful at anything he puts his mind to. It's precisely his variety of skills that come together that make Chris very successful."

And so, chatting with his staff in the kitchen, checking on a bubbling steamship round in the oven that's bound for a catered gig, showing off the nooks and crannies of the East Coast's exterior for a visitor, Chris Schlesinger is loving life. "It's like Lou Gehrig," he said. "I'm the luckiest guy on earth."

Go Lightly

Does the date January 25 conjure up horrific images of cocktail weenies, crushed beer cans, stupid million dollar commercials and the stench of stale stogies? Then leave your mate and his belching friends on the couch this Super Bowl Sunday and head to the Audrey Hepburn Film Festival at Borders Books & Music in Chestnut Hill. Trade rancid onion dip for some well-deserved romance—you've put up with the Patriots for months now—and catch the feminine icon in faves such as Roman Holiday, Breakfast at Tiffany's and How to Steal a Million. Then order a maid for the mess at home. Screenings start at 2 pm and are free and open to the public. Borders Books & Music, The Atrium Mall, 300 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill, 630-1935.

Brunch at Spasso.

A combination of Roman orgy, English country breakfast and Thanksgiving dinner.

For sheer unmatched brunch extravagance, may we suggest a visit to our buffet table. Here you will find hand-carved roasts like turkey, perfectly prepared, savory roast leg of lamb, pork loin stuffed with spinach and goat cheese. Then there's steaming hot pasta, sweet Italian sausage, waffles dripping with maple syrup, bacon, breakfast pizzas, salads, bagels and cream cheese, home-baked foccacio and our chef ready to prepare omelettes with your choice of fillings from the simple to the sublime.

Every Sunday from 11 AM to 2:30 PM you can sample some of it, all of it and have as much as you want of it, for only $12.95

Seedy Streets

Don't you just get bored with beautiful watercolor portraits of flowers, the long lean lines of marble sculptures and majestic oil canvases splashed with images of the great outdoors? That ain't real life, Jack. Artist Karen Davis feeds our craving for urban life in all its vulgarity with her gritty black and white photographs of city artifacts—everything from public bathrooms to objects discarded. Learn about the underground city—life lived on the streets or in the subway—at her exhibition titled Intersections, on view now at Gallery 57, 57 Inman St., Cambridge, through January 31.

Funck'n Groovin'

It's that time of the year to leave Adam Sandler's "Hanukkah Song" and the perennial "Grandma Got Run Over By A Reindeer" behind with the stale fruitcake (is that an oxymoron?) and shedding tinsel. Time to get over your eggnog hangover and check out some swingin' jazz, like Harrod and Funck. Described as "Simon and Garfunkel on Drugs" (isn't that redundant?), these two young songwriters gained acclaim on the flooded Boston music scene with the release of their first indie CD, Dreams of the Color Blind, while in their twenties. Their much anticipated second CD has recently been released and you can catch them live at Ryles Jazz Club on January 20 at 7:30 pm as part of the Naked Voices concert series.

Paula Cole to play at the Boston Music Awards.

Rock On

The super freeway some cali Los Angeles may play host to the Academy Awards, the Emmys and the Golden Globe awards, but Boston is home to the NeMO Music Showcase and Conference—three days of ear-splitting effluence. The premiere music conference in the Northeast is kicked off by the Kahiua Boston Music Awards at the Orpheum Theatre on January 15, featuring awards and performances by the area's most prominent artists. January 16 & 17 are for club-hopping at the music showcases, where 20 of Boston's most popular clubs open their doors to music insiders and the general public to welcome 200 of the hottest new unsigned and indie bands from all over North America. The Music Conference also takes place on January 16 & 17 at the Copley Plaza Hotel. More than 1500 industry professionals converge to network and exchange ideas through panels, workshops, clinics, demo critiques and keynote speakers. Call 338-3144 for more information.

NORTH COAST GOLF SHOWS

Ball Withdrawal

It's a long, cold winter here in New England for, well, too long to ponder. While some may suffer a simple malaise, such as seasonal affective disorder or hypothermia, others suffer a plight much more serious—Golf Withdrawal. While we can't defrost the green and bring back the goose poop, we can send you to the Greater Boston Golf Show. It's three days of official, doctor recommended links reminiscing. From January 23-25, the World Trade Center in Boston is taken over by a bunch of people in goofy pants who will feed the golf enthusiast the healing chicken soup of exhibits, stage presentations and ball striking activities. At $5-7, it's a hell of a lot cheaper than antibiotics. The show runs from 4-9 pm on Fri, 10 am-6 pm on Sat. and 10 am-5 pm on Sun.

Miss Saigon

Reinvigorating what some may call a sluggish Boston theater scene is the exclusive return engagement of the famed Broadway musical Miss Saigon. The tale of love and self-sacrifice between a young Vietnamese girl and an American soldier at the time of the fall of Saigon in 1975 opens January 14 and runs through February 28 at The Wang Theatre. Miss Saigon is a musical by Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg (the creators of Les Miserables) and stars Joseph Anthony Foronda as "The Engineer," Elizabeth Paw as "Kim," and Steve Pasquale as "Chris." Tickets are $15-65, call 931-2787. The Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston.

★ Don't Bother
★★★ Good

Pam Grier in Tarantino's Jackie Brown.

Deconstructing Harry

Woody Allen snaps back to top form with a willfully self-reflexive comedy that is sharply funny. Woody plays Harry, a writer whose stories sprout from—and twist—his life experiences. Harry's life and stories are an awful lot like Woody's films and stories, which have reflected his life experiences (up to a point, of course). Allen's past self-voyeurism has ranged from gutsy to creepy, but in Deconstructing Harry the conceit works because of a toughness and clarity of purpose that has been missing from his recent films. Allen seems recommitted to the task of acting, and makes Harry the most blunt and foul-mouthed incarnation of his persona yet. Again he has a sprawling ensemble cast, the standouts being Kirstie Alley, Richard Benjamin, Judy Davis and Elisabeth Shue.

Good Will Hunting is the best movie ever made in Boston. Cambridge natives Matt Damon and Ben Affleck wrote the screenplay about a Southie orphan catapulted into the MIT/Harvard axis after a professor discovers his math genius. It's a marvelously organic work—nurtured by director Gus Van Sant—in which Will Hunting (played by Damon) slowly matures as he meets a series of people who refuse to give up on him. The math professor (Stellan Skarsgaard), recognizing that the troubled boy's considerable anger may impede his intellectual progress, has him see a psychologist. Robin Williams gives a performance of quiet power as the therapist who is himself wounded from past tragedies. Will embarks on a sweet and thorny romance with a Harvard student (the wryly funny Minnie Driver). And Will's best friend (Affleck) gives him a swift-kick reality check when Will starts to retreat into himself. With its authentic Boston-Cambridge texture, this is a movie for everybody to enjoy, and for us to cherish.

Jackie Brown ★★★1/2

Quentin Tarantino's latest signature film is loads of fun, if a tad stretched out. Its also got one of the keenest tease-romances of the year, between star Pam Grier, as the flight attendant at the center of a cops-and-criminals squeeze, and Robert Forster as a grizzled bail bondsman with a heart of gold. Tarantino assembles a crack squad, with Samuel L. Jackson as the scary-funny gunrunner who employs Grier's Jackie as a courier; Robert De Niro as a dumbass ex-con (180 degrees from his verbal role in Wag the Dog); and Bridget Fonda hilarious as the smugly gorgeous manipulative chick. Tarantino proves in scene after scene that his filmmaking instincts are golden.

Kundun ★★★★

Martin Scorsese's film about the early years of the Dalai Lama—from his discovery by Buddhist monks in 1937 to his community's exodus from Tibet in 1959—is a film of great tenderness, sadness and strength. There's a magnificent clarity in Melissa Mathison's biographical screenplay, and Scorsese directs a cast of Tibetans who communicate the grave and joyful sense of purpose of carrying on Buddhist tradition through a boy who is believed to be the reincarnation of a holy leader. The filmmaking elements (production design, costume design and artful cinematography) that went into recreating a monastic life that has been largely destroyed by communist Chinese attacks are impeccable, but not the movie's raison d'etre. Scorsese makes this a film about faith and responsibility; it's a quieter complement to his Last Temptation of Christ. The only weak point in Kundun is that Philip Glass's score retreads his previous movie scores. This is a film that is both mesmerizing and keenly intelligent.

In a year that seems to have contained more movies than usual involving the death of children, Atom Egoyan's adaptation of Russell Banks' novel confronts that issue head-on. The resulting film is devastating and rewarding. A lawyer (Ian Holm) travels to a remote Canadian village in which nearly all the children have been killed in a school bus accident. His efforts to unite parents in a lawsuit ends up exacerbating rifts; the townspeoples' unsavory secrets are revealed amidst their grief.

The Tango Lesson

Director Sally Potter (Orlando) plays a director named Sally, and tango star Pablo Veron a dancer named Pablo, in Potter's deliciously playful fictionalized recounting of her obsession with the Argentinian dance. The cool Englishwoman works on her technique and is accepted by the dance-hall denizens, even in Buenos Aires. Her liaison with Pablo, wryly constructed like a musical-movie romance, involves an artistic exchange: she will follow his directions in the dance, if he will follow hers when they make a tango movie. Potter's hall-of-mirrors film is built to blueprint-precise specifications, yet its emotions feel spontaneous and it resonates with heart.

Kundun, Scorsese's film about the Dalai Lama's early years.

Tastings

are gastronomical events you simply can't miss. It's cold out and, this is scientifically proven, honest, you need those extra layers of fat to make it to spring.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Floridian Festival

If you're sick of the classic meat and potatoes fare of classic New England frozen winters, check out Magnolias' 2nd Annual Grand Floridian Festival. Through January 31, Magnolias in Cambridge celebrates a taste of the tropics with such sultry menu items as stone crab claws, sugar cane skewered pork tenderloin and conch fritters. The sunny culinary forecast blows in from the tropics every Tuesday through Saturday—don't forget the sunscreen.

Eastern Eats

Harvard Square's newest addition, Tanjore, promises to bring tasty treats from India, with the widest range of regional cooking styles—including Goanese, Upi, Parsi, Chettinad and Balti—in full or tapas-sized portions. Unique to Tanjore is British High Tea, served daily from 3-5 pm and late night hours (everything on the menu can be consumed until midnight).

Euro

Forget Seth Greenberg's haunts for the hottest Euro scene—hit Turner Fisheries at the Westin Copley Place Boston instead with its EuroCuisine '98. Starting January 22, Chef David Filippetti takes you on a culinary excursion spiced with European Michelin guest chef visits, cookbook signings and wine tastings. Menu specials will be paired with wines from Laboure-Roi and Chateau Lynch. Don't miss the Pan Seared Scallops Pancetta, and don't forget to stick your pinkie out ever so delicately while sipping your wine.

Chocoholics

Forget your New Year's resolutions and add to your waistline for a great cause. All winter Grill 23 on Berkeley Street serves a Chocolate Sampler Plate, consisting of several unique chocolate desserts created by pastry chef Judy Mattera, to benefit Share Our Strength. Two chocoholics can feast fabulously on the $20 house-made truffles, mousse, custard, cookies and cakes, with $5 to charity.

Recipe Festival

Boston Park Plaza Hotel has whipped up a dozen zesty weekends featuring international cooking demonstrations by famous Boston chefs for The Great Recipe Festival. Chefs and celebrities will share secrets and stories and feed patrons their specialties through March 29. The near future will entertain Joe Nartowicz from the Boston Park Plaza Hotel on January 17 and Joyce and Ron Della Chiesa from WGBH on January 24.

Improper IMPERSONALS

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. That's why we have the Improper Impersonals, a column written by you, the reader. Send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. Love Bug
Abelard said it of Heloise: I am all on fire with desire for you. Even more than medium tenders, hot. You stir me and I melt like fondue. How I love our walks and talks. The giggles and the dreaming. Can I be this lucky? So if I can't tell people at work (if they only knew about our trysts in the elevator!), I may as well tell the rest of the world...Te amo. Je t'aime. Ik hou van jou. Truly, madly, deeply. Happy birthday Pookie!

To All My Dears
Less than a month until I leave for Ireland! Who is going to read my poems? Who is going to be devastatingly beautiful? Who is going to tell me I can eat cookies if I want to? Who is going to love the flawed me? I will write I will write I will write, I promise. You will be my poems. Already missing you.
MY HEART (AND MIND) ALWAYS, BETH

To Waterstone's Sunny Day R.E. Fan
I like bringing you flowers even in the dead of December when it's freezing and I have to wait for hours in the bitter cold for public transportation. Note however that the rose was white, as opposed to red. Regardless, you might reciprocate sometime...what fun is it to be the only one receiving? I think you're wonderful, Mr. Thirty-something, but nature played this trick and bore me far too late.... So instead of hitting on you and embarrassing us both, would you settle for coffee? That is, when your manager isn't breathing down your neck. I hear the Other Side makes a mean latte...bring your sketch book, I'd like to see some work. You know where to find me.
YOUR FRIEND C.

To The Blond Slut At The Sunday Show At Avalon
That spot by the bar was mine! But you weasled your way in and invaded my space. Do us all a favor—if you're already 5'9", don't wear stiletto heels to a show. Some of us aren't gifted enough to have your Peg Bundy fashion sense. That includes the leopard print um...halter top, which would be ill-fitting on Barbie. Let it all hang out, right? I think it's sad that men treat women as objects because people like you allow them to do so. I didn't pay $18 to hear YOU sing, nor did I pay to hear you harass David Gavurin or talk to frat boys throughout the set. Try as you may, you cannot match Harriet Wheeler's ethereal splendor. Next time, save face—DO SHUT UP!!!
DISGRUNTLED FAN

To The Jerk Who Hit Me On My Bike Last Summer
Hey Ed Brooks, hit any more girls in Oakland Square lately? Make any more empty promises to reimburse them for their medical bills or repair costs? By the way, prescriptions (reactions to the stitches), the fork and stem, plus labor cost me well over 200 bucks, you deadbeat! Not to mention that my bike was my primary mode of transportation. And for you to work for Enterprise and not have any auto insurance—go figure, what an IRONY! What's their slogan—'we'll pick you up, we'll get you there'? Yeah, to the ER and back. Then to never be heard from again. If you have any soul and your conscience is ailing you, you know to send the money to the coffeehouse a few doors down. Think about this—had you killed me, you would have covered my funeral, you prick!

Post Office Babe
Brookline post office, Thursday, December 18, 2:30 pm. I stood at a table stamping a pile of Christmas cards. You were on your way out. Our eyes locked and we froze for an instant, like deer in eachother's headlights. Then we remembered we were strangers and resumed our individual paths, though neither of us wanted to. I should have asked how many cards you sent this year, but who's that quick? Me: brown eyes, glasses, black suede jacket, incredibly short hair and craving another chance. You: dark hair, dark eyes, dark coat and oh-so-cute. If it wasn't just my imagination, email me at Zip02146@aol.com.
NOT QUITE ENOUGH

To the Manager at Royal Books on Boylston
I've seen you a few times and think you're cute. You: Big dark-haired teddy bear with glasses and a beard. I last saw you working there Saturday evening, December 27. Me: Red hair and beard with glasses. I wear a leopard print scarf and black coat. If you are at all interested in anything (friendship, etc.) please say hello the next time I drop by as I am somewhat shy. Hope to hear from you.

465,000 REASONS TO GO OUT FOR A GREAT SUNDAY BRUNCH.

THE GREATER TABLE'S 7TH ANNUAL SUPER HUNGER BRUNCH SUNDAY, JANUARY 18, 1998

With over fifty of the area's finest restaurants participating in this year's Super Hunger Brunch, no one will go hungry. Every dollar you pay for your brunch goes directly to The Greater Boston Food Bank, Oxfam America and Fork In The Road. The Greater Boston Food Bank services more than 850 member agencies which feed 465,000 hungry people every month. Oxfam America supports more than 250 food security and long-term development projects in more than 30 countries, including the United States, every year. Fork In The Road is a food industry job training program for youth at risk.

So for just $25 or $15, depending on the restaurant, you can enjoy a sumptuous Champagne brunch from 11:00am to 2:00pm. It's the only brunch guaranteed to be filling, and fulfilling.

Please call the Super Hunger Brunch Hotline at (617)427-5200 for a list of participating restaurants.

THE GREATER TABLE

The Greater Table is a non-profit foundation. This Greater Table event is an alliance of Greater Boston restaurants and individuals working to raise funds for hunger relief organizations.

Paula Cole to play at the Boston Music Awards.

Rock On

The super freeway some call Los Angeles may play host to the Academy Awards, the Emmys and the Golden Globe awards, but Boston is home to the NeMO Music Showcase and Conference—three days of ear-splitting effluence. The premiere music conference in the Northeast is kicked off by the Kahlua Boston Music Awards at the Orpheum Theatre on January 15, featuring awards and performances by the area's most prominent artists. January 16 & 17 are for club-hopping at the music showcases, where 20 of Boston's most popular clubs open their doors to music insiders and the general public to welcome 200 of the hottest new unsigned and indie bands from all over North America. The Music Conference also takes place on January 16 & 17 at the Copley Plaza Hotel. More than 1500 industry professionals converge to network and exchange ideas through panels, workshops, clinics, demo critiques and keynote speakers. Call 338-3144 for more information.

GOLF SHOWS

Ball Withdrawal

It's a long, cold winter here in New England for, well, too long to ponder. While some may suffer a simple malaise, such as seasonal affective disorder or hypothermia, others suffer a plight much more serious—Golf Withdrawal. While we can't defrost the green and bring back the goose poop, we can send you to the Greater Boston Golf Show. It's three days of official, doctor recommended links reminiscing. From January 23-25, the World Trade Center in Boston is taken over by a bunch of people in goofy pants who will feed the golf enthusiast the healing chicken soup of exhibits, stage presentations and ball striking activities. At $5-7, it's a hell of a lot cheaper than antibiotics. The show runs from 4-9 pm on Fri, 10 am-6 pm on Sat. and 10 am-5 pm on Sun.

BY BETSY SHERMAN

★ Don't Bother
★★ Fair
★★★ Good

Pam Grier in Tarantino's Jackie Brown.

Woody Allen snaps back to top form with a willfully self-reflexive comedy that is sharply funny. Woody plays Harry, a writer whose stories sprout from—and twist—his life experiences. Harry's life and stories are an awful lot like Woody's films and stories, which have reflected his life experiences (up to a point, of course). Allen's past self-voyeurism has ranged from gutsy to creepy, but in Deconstructing Harry the conceit works because of a toughness and clarity of purpose that has been missing from his recent films. Allen seems recommitted to the task of acting, and makes Harry the most blunt and foul-mouthed incarnation of his persona yet. Again he has a sprawling ensemble cast, the standouts being Kirstie Alley, Richard Benjamin, Judy Davis and Elisabeth Shue.

Good Will Hunting is the best movie ever made in Boston. Cambridge natives Matt Damon and Ben Affleck wrote the screenplay about a Southie orphan catapulted into the MIT/Harvard axis after a professor discovers his math genius. It's a marvelously organic work—nurtured by director Gus Van Sant—in which Will Hunting (played by Damon) slowly matures as he meets a series of people who refuse to give up on him. The math professor (Stellan Skarsgaard), recognizing that the troubled boy's considerable anger may impede his intellectual progress, has him see a psychologist. Robin Williams gives a performance of quiet power as the therapist who is himself wounded from past tragedies. Will embarks on a sweet and thorny romance with a Harvard student (the wryly funny Minnie Driver). And Will's best friend (Affleck) gives him a swift-kick reality check when Will starts to retreat into himself. With its authentic Boston-Cambridge texture, this is a movie for everybody to enjoy, and for us to cherish.

Jackie Brown ★★★1/2

Quentin Tarantino's latest signature film is loads of fun, if a tad stretched out. Its also got one of the keenest tease-romances of the year, between star Pam Grier, as the flight attendant at the center of a cops-and-criminals squeeze, and Robert Forster as a grizzled bail bondsman with a heart of gold. Tarantino assembles a crack squad, with Samuel L. Jackson as the scary-funny gunrunner who employs Grier's Jackie as a courier; Robert De Niro as a dumbass ex-con (180 degrees from his verbal role in Wag the Dog); and Bridget Fonda hilarious as the smugly gorgeous manipulative chick. Tarantino proves in scene after scene that his filmmaking instincts are golden.

Kundun ★★★★

Martin Scorsese's film about the early years of the Dalai Lama—from his discovery by Buddhist monks in 1937 to his community's exodus from Tibet in 1959—is a film of great tenderness, sadness and strength. There's a magnificent clarity in Melissa Mathison's biographical screenplay, and Scorsese directs a cast of Tibetans who communicate the grave and joyful sense of purpose of carrying on Buddhist tradition through a boy who is believed to be the reincarnation of a holy leader. The filmmaking elements (production design, costume design and artful cinematography) that went into recreating a monastic life that has been largely destroyed by communist Chinese attacks are impeccable, but not the movie's raison d'etre. Scorsese makes this a film about faith and responsibility; it's a quieter complement to his Last Temptation of Christ. The only weak point in Kundun is that Philip Glass's score retreads his previous movie scores. This is a film that is both mesmerizing and keenly intelligent.

In a year that seems to have contained more movies than usual involving the death of children, Atom Egoyan's adaptation of Russell Banks' novel confronts that issue head-on. The resulting film is devastating and rewarding. A lawyer (Ian Holm) travels to a remote Canadian village in which nearly all the children have been killed in a school bus accident. His efforts to unite parents in a lawsuit ends up exacerbating rifts; the townspeoples' unsavory secrets are revealed amidst their grief.

Director Sally Potter (Orlando) plays a director named Sally, and tango star Pablo Veron a dancer named Pablo, in Potter's deliciously playful fictionalized recounting of her obsession with the Argentinian dance. The cool Englishwoman works on her technique and is accepted by the dance-hall denizens, even in Buenos Aires. Her liaison with Pablo, wryly constructed like a musical-movie romance, involves an artistic exchange: she will follow his directions in the dance, if he will follow hers when they make a tango movie. Potter's hall-of-mirrors film is built to blueprint-precise specifications, yet its emotions feel spontaneous and it resonates with heart.

Kundun, Scorsese's film about the Dalai Lama's early years.

are gastronomical events you simply can't miss. It's cold out and, this is scientifically proven, honest, you need those extra layers of fat to make it to spring.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Floridian Festival

If you're sick of the classic meat and potatoes fare of classic New England frozen winters, check out Magnolias' 2nd Annual Grand Floridian Festival. Through January 31, Magnolias in Cambridge celebrates a taste of the tropics with such sultry menu items as stone crab claws, sugar cane skewered pork tenderloin and conch fritters. The sunny culinary forecast blows in from the tropics every Tuesday through Saturday—don't forget the sunscreen.

Eastern Eats

Harvard Square's newest addition, Tanjore, promises to bring tasty treats from India, with the widest range of regional cooking styles—including Goanese, Upi, Parsi, Chettinad and Balti—in full or tapas-sized portions. Unique to Tanjore is British High Tea, served daily from 3-5 pm and late night hours (everything on the menu can be consumed until midnight).

Euro

Forget Seth Greenberg's haunts for the hottest Euro scene—hit Turner Fisheries at the Westin Copley Place Boston instead with its EuroCuisine '98. Starting January 22, Chef David Filippetti takes you on a culinary excursion spiced with European Michelin guest chef visits, cookbook signings and wine tastings. Menu specials will be paired with wines from Laboure-Roi and Chateau Lynch. Don't miss the Pan Seared Scallops Pancetta, and don't forget to stick your pinkie out ever so delicately while sipping your wine.

Chocoholics

Forget your New Year's resolutions and add to your waistline for a great cause. All winter Grill 23 on Berkeley Street serves a Chocolate Sampler Plate, consisting of several unique chocolate desserts created by pastry chef Judy Mattera, to benefit Share Our Strength. Two chocoholics can feast fabulously on the $20 house-made truffles, mousse, custard, cookies and cakes, with $5 to charity.

Recipe Festival

Boston Park Plaza Hotel has whipped up a dozen zesty weekends featuring international cooking demonstrations by famous Boston chefs for The Great Recipe Festival. Chefs and celebrities will share secrets and stories and feed patrons their specialties through March 29. The near future will entertain Joe Nartowicz from the Boston Park Plaza Hotel on January 17 and Joyce and Ron Della Chiesa from WGBH on January 24.

Love Bug
Abelard said it of Heloise: I am all on fire with desire for you. Even more than medium tenders, hot. You stir me and I melt like fondue. How I love our walks and talks. The giggles and the dreaming. Can I be this lucky? So if I can't tell people at work (if they only knew about our trysts in the elevator!), I may as well tell the rest of the world...Te amo. Je t'aime. Ik hou van jou. Truly, madly, deeply. Happy birthday Pookie!

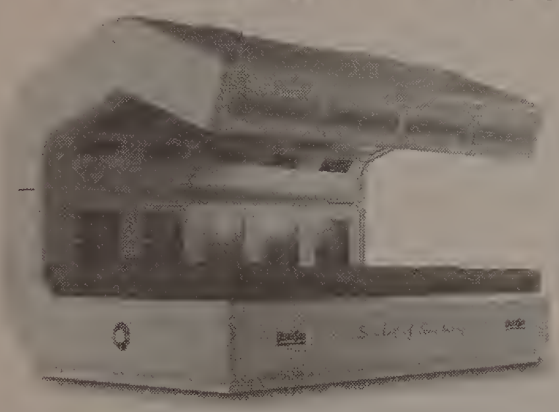
To All My Dears
Less than a month until I leave for Ireland! Who is going to read my poems? Who is going to be devastatingly beautiful? Who is going to tell me I can eat cookies if I want to? Who is going to love the flawed me? I will write I will write I will write, I promise. You will be my poems. Already missing you.
MY HEART (AND MIND) ALWAYS, BETH

To Waterstone's Sunny Day R.E. Fan
I like bringing you flowers even in the dead of December when it's freezing and I have to wait for hours in the bitter cold for public transportation. Note however that the rose was white, as opposed to red. Regardless, you might reciprocate sometime...what fun is it to be the only one receiving? I think you're wonderful, Mr. Thirty-something, but nature played this trick and bore me far too late.... So instead of hitting on you and embarrassing us both, would you settle for coffee? That is, when your manager isn't breathing down your neck. I hear the Other Side makes a mean latte...bring your sketch book, I'd like to see some work. You know where to find me.
YOUR FRIEND C.



To The Blond Slut At The Sunday Show At Avalon
That spot by the bar was mine! But you weasled your way in and invaded my space. Do us all a favor—if you're already 5'9", don't wear stiletto heels to a show. Some of us aren't gifted enough to have your Peg Bundy fashion sense. That includes the leopard print um...halter top, which would be ill-fitting on Barbie. Let it all hang out, right? I think it's sad that men treat women as objects because people like you allow them to do so. I didn't pay $18 to hear YOU sing, nor did I pay to hear you harass David Gavurin or talk to frat boys throughout the set. Try as you may, you cannot match Harriet Wheeler's ethereal splendor. Next time, save face—DO SHUT UP!!!
DISGRUNTLED FAN

To The Jerk Who Hit Me On My Bike Last Summer
Hey Ed Brooks, hit any more girls in Oakland Square lately? Make any more empty promises to reimburse them for their medical bills or repair costs? By the way, prescriptions (reactions to the stitches), the fork and stem, plus labor cost me well over 200 bucks, you deadbeat! Not to mention that my bike was my primary mode of transportation. And for you to work for Enterprise and not have any auto insurance—go figure, what an IRONY! What's their slogan—'we'll pick you up, we'll get you there'? Yeah, to the ER and back. Then to never be heard from again. If you have any soul and your conscience is ailing you, you know to send the money to the coffeehouse a few doors down. Think about this—had you killed me, you would have covered my funeral, you prick!

Post Office Babe
Brookline post office, Thursday, December 18, 2:30 pm. I stood at a table stamping a pile of Christmas cards. You were on your way out. Our eyes locked and we froze for an instant, like deer in eachother's headlights. Then we remembered we were strangers and resumed our individual paths, though neither of us wanted to. I should have asked how many cards you sent this year, but who's that quick? Me: brown eyes, glasses, black suede jacket, incredibly short hair and craving another chance. You: dark hair, dark eyes, dark coat and oh-so-cute. If it wasn't just my imagination, email me at Zip02146@aol.com.
NOT QUITE ENOUGH

To the Manager at Royal Books on Boylston
I've seen you a few times and think you're cute. You: Big dark-haired teddy bear with glasses and a beard. I last saw you working there Saturday evening, December 27. Me: Red hair and beard with glasses. I wear a leopard print scarf and black coat. If you are at all interested in anything (friendship, etc.) please say hello the next time I drop by as I am somewhat shy. Hope to hear from you.

465,000 REASONS TO GO OUT FOR A GREAT SUNDAY BRUNCH.

THE GREATER TABLE'S 7TH ANNUAL SUPER HUNGER BRUNCH SUNDAY, JANUARY 18, 1998

With over fifty of the area's finest restaurants participating in this year's Super Hunger Brunch, no one will go hungry. Every dollar you pay for your brunch goes directly to The Greater Boston Food Bank, Oxfam America and Fork In The Road. The Greater Boston Food Bank services more than 850 member agencies which feed 465,000 hungry people every month. Oxfam America supports more than 250 food security and long-term development projects in more than 30 countries, including the United States, every year. Fork In The Road is a food industry job training program for youth at risk.

So for just $25 or $15, depending on the restaurant, you can enjoy a sumptuous Champagne brunch from 11:00am to 2:00pm. It's the only brunch guaranteed to be filling, and fulfilling.

Please call the Super Hunger Brunch Hotline at (617)427-5200 for a list of participating restaurants.

THE GREATER TABLE

The Greater Table is a non-profit foundation. This Greater Table event is an alliance of Greater Boston restaurants and individuals working to raise funds for hunger relief organizations.

With the millennium fast approaching, it's time to introduce America to the Year of the Century. 1968—volatile and dysfunctional—the year that changed this country forever. With its relentless parade of moments during 366 turbulent days, no single year has come close to having its impact on America. At least that's what our author thinks.

One For The Hip

Jonathan Soroff's interview of Denis Leary (December 17) was pretty lame, partly because Soroff adopts the hip interviewer schtick and asks a bunch of oh-so-wacky questions ("How's your prostate?"), but mostly because Leary—in spite of what you say in the table of contents—has mellowed. Yes, he still is angry at some predictable things—I mean, who doesn't hate Oprah?—but what is so sadly missing is the intensity and the incorrectness which made his No Cure for Cancer performance (on CD and video) such an excellent piece of work. Neither Leary's new CD, Lock 'N Load, nor certainly any of his movies, come within a light year of the No Cure for Cancer performance. It has been sad to see him lose (or give up) his comic intensity.

You Bet Your Bippy They're Real

Where do you get those "Oh No's" (December 17)? Are they real? It might be a good idea if you credited the newspaper or magazine that they come from, because some of them I remembered from being in the Globe, but some of them sound like they came from a wacky supermarket tabloid. My favorite was the newlyweds where the woman stabbed her unfaithful husband, and they lived in Harmony Home Trailer Park. What a world!

Putting Our Mouth Where Their Money Is

Please congratulate Jonathan Soroff and whoever else is responsible for publishing the article about the "Women You Can't Say No To" (January 14). While it's true that some of these women are independently wealthy, or inherited or married money, it's also true that they spend their time and their money to help others, instead of just shopping and vacationing. I especially liked the quote from Diddy Cullinane, who said that she knew a lot of "bored people," who, if they knew how rewarding it was, would line up to do volunteer work. I know that Barbara Jordan also donates a lot of money to the Family Center in Somerville, where I have a friend who works there. You publish a lot of cheeky and sometimes negative articles, so it's really refreshing to read so much about so many who are so good. Thanks again.

Puhleez, No St. Rick

Ah, Rick Pitino ("Boston's Booster Shot," December 17), the man of the $1000 suits, perfect hair, and those white teeth. Mmm. Manicured nails, too. I suppose that's what passes for "vim, vigor and zest" around these parts. Of course a more savvy minded sort, especially one with a little background on basketball might ask where is any mention of Pitino's well-known penchant for spinning a fable or two about his players (the better to boost their trade value). Or his knack for lining his pockets, courtesy of loyal basketball fans, only to leave those very same folks in the lurch. Don't forget, Rick Pitino's never seen a job he didn't quit. Wherever he's worked, Pitino's promised the world and made an initial delivery on the goods and then bolted when a better offer came along. No crime there. But puhleez. Let's call a spade a spade. Or in this case, a charmer salesman-type, a charmer salesman-type. As for his much valued coaching style, where's the beef? The Celtics are four games under 500 and falling fast. As for his most notable display of coaching prowess, at Kentucky, anyone could have led five future NBA players to an NCAA championship. Anything less would have been considered total failure.

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN may have foresight in ordaining Pitino for saint-hood. Then again, it may want to wait.

MOVING ON UP

Mario Russo, of hair salon success, recently purchased a home on Beacon Hill, hard by the indigenous Cabots. Nonetheless, word has it he's looking to migrate, at least professionally, with eyes on a new salon, perhaps in New York or Palm Beach.

And, as if the Hill didn't already have its share of old and nouveau notables, Carly Simon has purchased a townhouse on West Cedar Street. Her main manse remains on the Vineyard, where she's got another new and notable neighbor, TV producer Diane English (Murphy Brown, etc.), who's settling into a Cow Bay home, where, say friends, she plans to throw herself a 50th birthday bash. Guests will include, no doubt, neighbors Ted Danson and Mary Steenburgen, whose ill-fated sitcom English tried to salvage last year. Real estate circles are also abuzz with word John F. Kennedy Jr. has plunked down dinero for a home in Hyannis Port, hard by the rest of the you-know-whos. Hope Carolyn likes coffee klatching.

AND FROM THE FAMOUS FAMILIES MAY DIE BUT DON'T FADE AWAY FILE...

As the drumbeat begins to parole former underground fugitive Katherine Ann Power, convicted in the 1970s bank robbery/cop-killing of Walter Schroeder, look for daughter Claire Schroeder, a retired cop who teaches first amendment rights, to run against incumbent Christopher Iannella, son of the late Boston city council president, for the Governor's Council, which among obscure duties, approves newly named judges.

AND THE BRIDE WORE MAROON. REALLY.

Campy Kay Hanley, star of rock's Letters to Cleo (and IMPROPER interview gal, December 3) wed band-matc Michael Eisenstein January 18 in a civil ceremony followed by a Cambridge reception where thc swing band Scx Fox entertained some of Boston's music elite, including Staci Jones of Veruca Salt, manager Michael Kramer, Jed Parish and Ed Valauskas of Gravel Pit, Jules Verdon and Drew Parsons of Tracy Bonham. The party then moved to the Kendall Café in Kendall Square and eventually to Boston Billiards where general manager Casey Riddlef helped the happy newlyweds to a game of eight ball. Really.

Hanley

FROM THE DON'T GET MAD, GET EVEN FILE...

Hard-core politicos are chuckling at fundraising in the Norfolk County District Attorney's race (a knee-slapper, for sure) which, at year's end, showed Democrat Bill Keating with more money in his coffers ($271,207) than the other three candidatcs (incumbent Jeffrey Locke, former Dukakis aide Jack Corrigan and county comissioner William O'Donnell) combined. Word has it state Sen. Keating has almost as much support among Republicans as from his own party, harking back to his 1994 notorious and quixotic challengc to force out then Senatc president Billy Bulger.

LOVE AMONG THE RUINS

Once upon a time at the White House, in slightly more salubrious days—pick a day, any day—romance was not a litigious subject. And so it came to pass that a fair daughter of Boston married a boon buddy of the President's, and Clinton danced (more or less) at their wedding. Indeed, the nuptials January 10 of Susan Brophy and Gerry McGowan were cause for great happiness among the many friends of both. Brophy, who was single, had been an aide to then Lieutenant Governor Tom O'Neill in 1975-79; worked for John Drew during the White administration at City Hall; took a Master's at the Kennedy School; founded and ran the local advocacy group, Women in Construction, and worked on the Dukakis presidential campaign in '88. She's been a top aide to Clinton since he took office.

McGowan, an old fricnd of Clinton's, is a widower with five children, who's just been named ambassador to Portugal. Guests at their Washington wedding, in addition to the Clintons, Madeleine Albright (who offered the toast) and about 300 others, included the Brophy family from Harwich, Tom Oliphant of the Globe, Mark Gearon, a former Dukakite now head of the Peace Corps, and Congressman Ed Markey. Friends found it especially apt that Brophy wore a Vera Wang gown of pale green, given, as one said, "Susan's involvement in all matters Irish." The President was even quoted as quipping he was concerned about having "two Irish people in Portugal. It could destroy centuries of peaceful diplomacy."

Schlow

NEXT UP ON THE FOOD HIT PARADE

Long-threatening (or promise) comes at last, with Providence restaurateurs Johanne Killeen and George Germon taking over chic Café Louis in the Louis clothing store on Berkeley Street. The culinary couple of Al Forno fame, who've long eyed a spot in Boston, have hired chef David Reynoso, who specializes in Mediterranean fare, and expect to open in March. Meanwhile, chef Michael Schlow, who put the café on the map, and left at year's end, says, contrary to scuttlebutt, he isn't joining forces with Seth Greenberg and Paul Roiff of Mistral at their forthcoming boutique hotel at 15 Beacon. Schlow says he and partner Chris Myers (formerly of Rialto) are still looking for that special spot.

Q IT UP

A new party night called Chrome debuts this week at Q in Kenmore Square. A brainchild of John Devo (former booker for Culture night at Axis) and Buster (host of Cybersounds on WBCN), the draw will be big-name DJs from all over the world every Thursday night, beginning with DJ Dan from San Francisco this week and Bad Boy Bill from Chicago on February 5. ✦

Harmsworth

LIFESTYLES OF THE IVY LEAGUE AND FRIVOLOUS

Yes, that's a photo of white-hot literary agent Esmond Harmsworth, of Newbury Street's Zachary Shuster Agency, in the February Vanity Fair, in an article about Brown University's uncanny ability to attract the children of the rich and famous. Harmsworth, a Brown alum whose father was the English press baron Lord Rothcrmere and mothcr was of the Texas-oil Murchisons, called the article "ridiculous," saying that his comments were taken out of context.

"They quoted me on how I envisioned it before I got there—lots of partying and dorm shenanigans," he says. (To wit: "There were desperate Americans who would affect French and Italian accents. After a while, it got to be like the cast of Upstairs, Downstairs.") "What they left out is the reality, which was quite different. There were a lot of very serious, intelligent and intense students, but I think they just wanted to prove some point about glitz and glamor."

Well, after all, serious, intelligent and intense doesn't cxactly sell magazines.

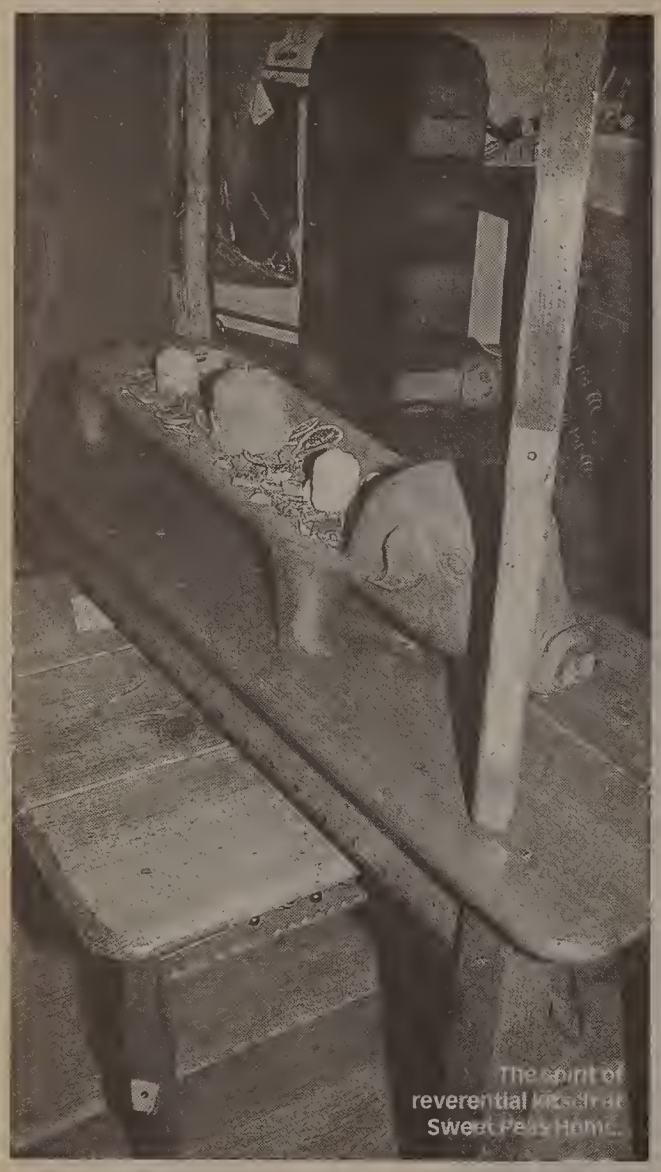
Greek Gods And Cheez-Whiz

Mike Ladd's music falls into no obvious category, and his Armageddon is a many-flavored thing.



Mike Ladd's "non-boxable" music is beyond category.

IT'S A FITTING IRONY THAT THIS CD OF THE Music of Mike Ladd from Cambridge has been put in the easy-listening section of one record store just because its title, more coruscating than smoothie-ish, is Easy Listening For Armageddon. Ladd calls this brew "non-boxable music," beyond category, though it has hip-hop influences, residual beatniky poetic cadence and even a little marginal satanic danceability. Each cut is a small performance combining attitudes of menacing prophecy and proclamation jammed with haute-rap rhymes that bring together Agamemnon, Cindy Crawford, Kurt Cobain and, as he puts it, "my favorite Spiro Agnew," alongside sexual imagery involving Wall Street. Speaking of black ancestors, and life in the ghetto, Ladd intones with a version of the thunderous tones of Martin Luther King woundedly commanding, "You can't keep me or my family down!" Though he can also slip into a tone of outright despair and disappointment, Ladd also slithers into master of ceremonies smarminess to oil his way into a pastiche of threatening, hypnotic talk that is also surprisingly funny. In the cut "The Post Apocalypse Arkestra" there's a reference to the late, mystical Sun Ra, a real influence. In each cut, Ladd straddles centuries and combines images and dictions that make weird, colorful bedfellows.

Mind Your Sweet Peas And Queue Up

Sweet Peas Home at 216 Clarendon St., Boston (247-2828), is a place of whimsical furniture and home accessories.

LIZ MCCUTCHEON WAS WALKING DOWN THE STREET in Denver when she was struck by the inspiring Yes! upon seeing furniture-maker David Marsh's madcap, but perfectly useful, furniture. His colorful, crafty furniture has a cow-jumped-over-the-moon charm, and although his pieces are made of pine that is hardly elegant (it's proudly knotty and splitty) they are adorned with painted zig zags (reminiscent of a comic book king's crown) and all manner of wacky, and pretty, little ornamentations, studs and glued-on thickening additives. Marsh, who's from Texas, calls his work "marvelous and tacky." Tables and cabinets are displayed in irreverent pile-ups. Expect the anti-serious here—a long carved wooden trough eventuating in a pig's head, a glassy picture frame full of gin or cigar ads, a huge mirror admonishing you to wash your face and scrub behind your ears. Self-mocking straw hats become lampshades, or a greeny TV set on wheels that's a picture frame. In the spirit of reverential kitsch, McCutcheon sells a beauty box slathered with '50s mag-pix. Yet the store's softer, spiritual side is represented by pretty books on dreaming or for recording wedding memories. The eccentric, in watering cans and clocks, is served by pieces made of saved-from-oblivion shards of different kinds of broken pottery. The pale green shutter-style shelves that display stuff would have the impact of the architectural just sitting against your walls.

West County Hard Cider is an Emma Thompson of a drink.

The Next Great Drink

The Maloney family from Colrain, Mass, offers the lightest, cheerful bottled hard cider—the very thing to drink with dinner.

TO APPRECIATE THE SUBTLE LOCATION, IN THE MUSICAL scale of the mouth, of the taste of this hard cider from West County Hard Cider, first rid your tastebuds of the things it is not. It is not dark, swilly and robust like regular cider (however good), nor does it have that slightly frustrating neither-here-nor-there quality of a wine cooler. It's not wine of course, though there's a distant cousinship—pingponging from grape to apple—between the lightest of light white wines and this bubbly hard cider, which has less than half the alcohol (from four to six percent), a difference you can pleasantly appreciate when you can still read a book after dinner. This family winery, in business since 1984, uses local apples (not from concentrate!) blending bittersharp and bittersweet ones with sharps like northern spy and sweets like red delicious. Too bad it must be called "hard" because if anything it tastes, and makes you feel, easygoing. Also too bad the word "refreshing" has been overused by tinny tacky soft drinks, because it well applies. It's an Emma Thompson of a drink, both modest and bracing. Bottled (no six packs) and capped, this cider goes very well, unobtrusively, indeed enhancingly, with food. It comes in "bone-dry" to sweet—and even that is restrained—and can be found at De Luca's, Martignetti's, Hi-Rise Bread Co.—and on tap at the Plough and Stars.

Bar Joke of the Week

While gut-busting jokes, scathing one-liners and witty barbs sound earthquakingly memorable while you're slugging back the suds at your local watering hole, they're usually long forgotten (along with the name of that person lying in bed next to you) the following day. Here's one overheard, and remembered, at 29 Newbury Street:

A hot babe's car breaks down on a rambling country road, so she knocks on a nearby farmer's door for help. Farmer Joe permits her to stay the night, as long as she doesn't touch his sons. City girl that she is, this is too tempting to resist. Late at night, she knocks on Billy Bob's door and asks if she can "make him a man." He replies that he's never been with a woman and doesn't know what to do. "No problem," replies the vixen, "I'll do all the work, you just need to wear this condom so I don't get pregnant." After a roll in the hay, the unquenchable young woman repeats the scenario with Billy Bob's brother, John Boy. Six months later, Billy Bob can't keep the secret any longer and tells John Boy about his becoming a man—and finds, to his horror, that John Boy had the same exact experience. In a rage, Billy Bob says, "Do you care if she gets pregnant?" John Boy shakes his head no and Billy Bob says, "neither do I, let's take these condoms off."

(NON) MONOTONOUS MONOTYPES

Joseph Solman—expressionist artist with roots in the Cape Ann artists colony and with family in Boston—shows his "Paintings From 1935-1996" at the Mercury Gallery on Newbury Street January 24 through February 28. Turning the ripe age of 89 the night of his reception on January 24, Solman was the founder of the Group of Ten in New York—among the first American expressionist painters—back in the 1930s.

The Artist's Valentine

Alrighty fellas, please heed my warning: No more chocolates! With V Day fast approaching, get yourself down to The Society of Arts and Crafts at 175 Newbury St. and impress your lady with some original art (even if it only costs $3). For the third year in a row, The Artist's Valentine features handcrafted valentines—including prints, handmade paper, collages, paintings, carved stone and cut steel—by 60 different artists. Forget schmaltzy Hallmark cards for your pookie. How 'bout earning extra points for honesty with a whimsical Cupid holding a heart coyly over his privates, exclaiming "My heart's in the right place." The sale lasts from Feb. 3 through Feb. 16 (longer than your love, one hopes), with proceeds supporting a grant program for artists. Prices range from $3-300.

Cable Guy

By Michael Metro

Mix the '70s horror-schlock of Kolchak: The Night Stalker with the slick gothic atmosphere of Twin Peaks, add liberal doses of Stephen King, and what do you get? The X-Files, of course. Years before the cult TV series, King's novels featured vampires, CIA experiments, ghosts, ESP, crazed high-schoolers, firestarters, etc. The reclusive author from Maine now comes on board and, with series creator Chris Carter, co-writes the Feb. 8 episode of the X-Files (Feb. 8, 9 pm, Fox). Sure to be a cult classic.

BUT PLEASE, LEAVE OUT LORD OF THE DANCE: The documentary The Irish in America: Long Journey Home concludes tonight (running Jan. 26-28, 9 pm, WGBH). Tracing the 200 year history of Irish immigrants in America, this collaboration between WGBH and Disney culminates with the Alfred E. Smith's failed run at the White House in 1928 and the Kennedy victory in the 1960 presidential election. If you missed the opening episodes, the whole series is being released on videotape.

MUST SEE TV JUST KEEPS GOING, AND GOING: NBC is going for the jugular this Thursday. To start, check out Jennifer Aniston's off-screen love, Tate Donovan, on Friends (Jan. 29, 8 pm, Channel 7). He plays Rachel's personal-shopping client whom she, of course, develops a crush on. Donovan has starred in movies such as Love Potion No. 9 and, in gossip circles, is also known as Sandra Bullock's former flame. Brian Dennehy and fellow Tommy Boy co-star David Spade are reunited on Just Shoot Me (Jan. 29, 8:30 pm, Channel 7). Dennehy plays Finch's father, who visits his son to let him know that he's willing to accept that his son is gay. Problem is, Finch (Spade) isn't. And on ER (Jan. 29, 10 pm, Channel 7), Carter (Noah Wyle) has to make an ethical decision when a snowstorm restricts access to the hospital's dwindling blood supply.

SAY GOODNIGHT, MICHAEL: This year's edition of the NBA lovefest known as All-Star Weekend could be Michael Jordan's last. TNT carries the preliminaries Feb. 6 & 7, including the rookie game and three point shootout. The NBA All-Star Game is on Channel 7 (NBC) on Sunday.

THE NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM: The Aquarium hosted 500 guests on January 10 at the opening of its $20.9 million west wing. Its new exhibit, Coastal Rhythms: Creatures on the Edge, reveals the dramatic world where the land meets the sea and includes cliff-diving puffins, baby saltwater crocodiles and huge Japanese spider crabs. For $100 per person, guests enjoyed cocktails, hors d'oeuvres dinner and the presentation of the David Stone Medal, which honors service to the environment. The medal winners were Dr. James McCarthy, a biologist at Harvard University, and Walter Cronkite.

BEN MEZRICH'S BOOK PARTY: The Harvard Club played host on January 15 to the launch of Ben Mezrich's nationwide book tour for Reaper. One hundred and fifty guests enjoyed drinks and hors d'oeuvres while Mezrich, a Harvard graduate and writer for the X-Files, signed copies of his medical thriller.

MOVIES

Fire and Brimstone

By Betsy Sherman

Duvall's The Apostle portrays the Bible Belt with enthusiasm

IT'S ODD THAT THE END-CREDITS MUSIC of The Apostle is Lyle Lovett's "(I'm a) Soldier in the Army of the Lord," as the song reeks of a wiseass stance completely absent from the film. Robert Duvall's compelling movie, which the actor wrote, directed and starred in, is bravely conflicted about its Southern preacher protagonist, a man of hubris and charm. Yet it never suggests a superior point of view toward him or his world. Duvall's strength as a filmmaker is that he records behavior from eye-level, accepting what he sees and hears as he shapes it into narrative form.

The Apostle transports us into an authentic-feeling Bible Belt that has its gothic heart of darkness, yet is sustained by folks gifted with the grace and strength to get through a life that has few luxuries. Looming larger than life is Sonny Dewey (Duvall), a Pentecostal shouter. In an audacious juxtaposition, the film opens with documentary-like footage of the boy Sonny at a black church service where a blind preacher mesmerizes with a melodious fire-and-brimstone rant. Then Duvall drops us into a wild moment of truth—the adult Sonny, driving with his mother (June Carter Cash), pounces upon the victims of a car accident and lays on hands, hoping to either revive the injured couple or send their souls to heaven.

With barely enough time to settle, the movie sketches Sonny's troubled domestic situation. Wife Jessie (Farrah Fawcett) decides that she and their children can't continue to live with the volatile preacher—and she has him bounced from the church he founded. Sonny's reaction is violent (he warmly refers to his children as his "beauties," yet doesn't spare them the sight of bashing mom's boyfriend with a baseball bat). Forced to flee suburban Fort Worth, Sonny fakes his death and treks into the countryside, loudly asking Jesus for guidance. He baptizes himself as The Apostle E.F. A hospitable black retiree points him towards the Rev. Charles Blackwell (John Beasley) in Bayou Bouttée, Louisiana.

Sleepy Bayou Bouttée is the stage for Sonny/E.F.'s attempt to redeem himself, and to take as many souls on his ascent as he can gather. With Blackwell's blessing, and the money he earns as a mechanic and short-order cook, Sonny renovates an abandoned church ("I could do some shoutin' in here," he beams). He attracts a small congregation that's mostly black and female. They're played by non-professionals led by the marvelous Zelma Loyd and Joyce Jolivet Starks as the feuding Sister Johnson and Sister Delilah. Sonny preaches on the local radio station owned by Elmo (Ricky Dial, who made his film debut as Carl's boss in Sling Blade), and takes a shine to secretary Toosie. The amazing Miranda Richardson adds to her portfolio of vivid characterizations with the amusingly sparrow-like Toosie, whose feelings about Sonny play out visibly on her face as a skirmish between her trusting eyes and her skeptical mouth.

Actor Duvall twinkles as Sonny ingratiates himself with the townspeople, but we remember the preacher's dark edge. Sonny and his One Way Road to Heaven Holiness Temple are tested by an antagonist played by Billy Bob Thornton. In a word, his character is a racist who resents the mix of blacks and whites. But he's also something more metaphysical. Director Duvall confounds expectation by having Thornton play out his intense scenes sotto voce, without histrionics. Sonny's story comes full circle with a long, electric sequence during a church service.

The Apostle is a piquantly unsettling ride. It's undeniably illuminating about a slice of society that gets little attention from Hollywood. In punchy montages, Duvall shows how there's a lot of communication going on on the tent revival circuit (the preachers' words are translated into Spanish by one dynamic lady, and into sign language by another). Unlike the average cinematic product, this film comes from a place of curiosity and enthusiasm. That Duvall rolled these impulses into such a complex story is an important achievement. ✦

Hell Nights

Spinazzola's smashing eve...the North End's Davide.

IT'S Spinazzola TIME. THE ANNUAL gala on February 6 will serve as a fitting end to a week-long food odyssey at the Hynes Convention Center. Boston Cooks runs from January 31 through February 6, with its signature "dine around" specials. The 13th annual fundraiser named in honor of the late Boston Globe restaurant critic, Anthony Spinazzola, features everything you want to know about food, wine and nutrition.

If you can stand to eat another bite, there is an exclusive party February 5 at the Inn at Harvard, consisting of a six-course meal, with each of the special guest chefs creating an original dish. The space is limited to 100 people at $500 a plate, but it should be worth it with award winning chefs including Bruno Feldeisen, the recipient of the James Beard award for best pastry chef in the country. Others are Michael Mina, nominated for best rising star chef of 1997 by the James Beard Foundation; Theirry Rautureau, executive chef at Rover's in Seattle; Norman Van Aken, owner of Norman's in Miami and winner of the Beard Foundation's Best Chef of the Southeast of 1997; Diane Forley, chef/owner of Verbena in New York; Kirk Avondoglio, executive chef of Perona Farms in Andover, New Jersey (yes, people know what good food is there); Michael Ginor, president and co-owner of Hudson Valley Foie Gras; and Jean-Louis Palladin, executive chef at Napa Restaurant in Las Vegas.

Matt Gauland and Maureen Rubino preparing for a night of Hell at The East Coast Grill.

The East Coast Grill hosts two back-to-back Hell Nights February 2 and 3. This demonic doubleheader is chock-full of the hottest food in the city. Specialties include the original pasta from hell, lava soaked grilled tuna, and habanero, smoked duck tamales. Take your Pepcid AD and order enough margaritas to quench the flames.

An old establishment has some new faces running the show. Brothers Anthony and Frank Gesualdi, and their partner, chef Franco Caritano, are negotiating with Angelo Vinvenzo to buy his North End restaurant, Davide. In the meantime, the Gesualdi brothers and Caritano are operating as a management company and running the daily operations for the Italian eatery on Commercial Street.

Jim Hamelburg, of ill-fated Savoy now reopened as the G-Lounge, recently brought in Paul Roiff, real-estate developer and co-owner of Mistral, as an investor and partner. Hamelburg has applied to the city for an entertainment license to bring live jazz to the G-Lounge, a move that has raised some opposition from neighborhood competitors such as Lorenzo Savona of Les Zygomates, which already has live jazz Sunday through Thursday.

Olivia English fanned the fire of the rumors that she and husband Todd plan to open an Olives-type restaurant at the Mirage in Las Vegas when she coyly mentioned at a recent conference that they were "currently working on a big project very far away." Neither English was available to confirm or deny, but word is that the project is Todd's pet. ✦

Trynin is envious of great performers.

MUSIC

Under the Knife

By Paul Robicheau

Boston's Jen Trynin may be Gun Shy Trigger Happy, but she won't sell out

JEN TRYNIN SUGGESTS MEETING AT HMV Records before doing an interview at a Harvard Square coffeeshop. HMV is an easy landmark, Trynin says. Plus she can see if her second album Gun Shy Trigger Happy is there.

"If I'm in a record store, I check to see if it's in stock, 'cause if, by chance, someone does want to buy it, I would like it to be in the store," says Trynin. Then she considers another angle. "It's good that it's out there, but no good, because someone hasn't bought it."

Trynin views relationships from varied angles on Gun Shy Trigger Happy, broadened with more slow, haunting songs than her garage-rockin' debut Cockamamie. "I didn't want to do the same record again," she says, adding of relationships, "a lot of times, people write songs about this topic in an accusatory fashion, like 'You fucked me over. I'm so sad now. How could you hurt me?' I find that rather boring, 'cause to me, that's a given. Also in relationships, nobody's ever to blame. It takes two to tango."

So far, in her relationship to success, Trynin's tango in the music business is one-sided. She was recently a feature performer at the Boston Music Awards, where she had four nominations including Album of the Year. Gun Shy Trigger Happy was a critical favorite in 1997 (gracing best-of-year lists from local favorites to Entertainment Weekly), but it hasn't sold well.

"As far as what's going to sell and what's not going to sell, you can't tell," says Trynin, 34. "Anyone who could tell would be a billionaire."

A friend even asked Trynin if she ever considered selling out. "If I knew how to do that, so I would be assured of doing this the rest of my life, I would do it," she says, admitting that playing one chord on a keyboard and singing "Da, da, da" would be going too far. "I don't even know what that means, selling out. What could I possibly do? I'm writing music that people can understand. I'm not crazy. I'm just a songwriter. I'm a pretty simple person. I'm doing straightforward stuff."

Not only is Trynin one of Boston's best pop songwriters, but she benefits from one of Boston's best producers in Mike Denneen (Aimee Mann, Letters to Cleo). "He's a really good arranger," Trynin says. "He's got interesting ideas about different sounds." He's also her boyfriend and housemate. Do their personal and professional relationships overlap? "At home, I'm not comfortable working on songs if anyone can hear me at all," she says. "Sometimes, especially Mike. But then it will get to a certain point where, and this is just laziness on my part, it's quicker and easier for me to go, 'This is what I got. Do you think this chord should be doubled at the end?'"

Trynin has also evolved as a guitarist and vocalist along the way. But it's the latter she's developing now, adding guitarist Cory Harding to her trio of bassist Josh Lattanzi and drummer Steve Scully. "I got a little tired of doing it all," says Trynin, who's even been singing a bit sans guitar. "I'm not a great performer, and I'm really trying to get better, 'cause I think that will definitely help my cause. It's not that easy for me. I'm definitely envious of people who I see up on stage who are great performers."

Though she admits getting excited by doing rocking tunes live, Trynin says she's comfortable playing everything on her new CD. Slower gems include "Getaway (February)," comparing a person to that short month ("You know people like that too, always like, 'I'm leaving,' and they never leave"), and "Under the Knife," an eerie meditation on cosmetic surgery. "We're just so slammed all the time with people's looks. And video killed the radio star. That kinda says it all—fine, take a knife, I'll cut myself up. I'll rearrange my looks. Then will people listen to my music? Then are you a sellout?" ✦

U-turns

By Tom Weisend

CVS leads the 1998 dippy jingle competition

TWENTY YEARS AGO, EVERYONE KNEW that "Have it your way" was Burger King's ad slogan and, at rival McDonald's, "You deserve a break today." Since that time, those two chains have made many changes to their subsequent ad campaigns, but many still recall those slogans as if they heard them yesterday.

Fast forward two decades, and you'll find some significant advertisers making U-turns away from their well-known slogans. At Dunkin' Donuts, it's no longer "Time to make the donuts." Instead, "Something fresh is always brewin' here." Nike just chucked "Just Do It" in favor of "I Can." And CVS, once "Today's neighborhood drugstore," is now taking on customers "One at a time."

"Where's the Beef" of the '90s.

While some of these advertisers' slogans were a little musty, their replacements ain't much better. The case of CVS is particularly baffling.

This chain had better-than-average retail advertising on TV and radio for nearly a decade, thanks to Boston agency Ingalls Advertising. But corporate changes and the take-over of the Rite-Aid chain—that led to a shift to New York mega-agency Bates Advertising—has resulted in a sort of non-ad campaign. As astute readers know, I'm no fan of jingles in general, and I think CVS has achieved an early lead in the 1998 dippy jingle competition. This particular one promises to help customers "One at a time" and sounds as if it's sung by a reunion of the King family. Have you been to CVS lately? Trying to get someone's attention is only less fruitless than hoping there won't be a tremendous line. "One million at a time" is more like it.

At Dunkin' Donuts, the actor who portrayed Fred the Baker left as the chain's mascot last year. To its credit, the Randolph-based doughnut pusher has come up with a rather pleasing, if somewhat benign, effort. As our eating habits shift, fat-filled cholesterol sticks have lost some of their appeal. By giving the company's much-vaunted coffee star-billing, it will encourage fitness-minded folk to patronize the stores.

Nike's decision to can "Just Do It" is the big ad surprise of the new year. "Just Do It" has been called—by minds far more intuitive than mine—the greatest ad slogan of all time. Talk about an intimidating task. Creating a follow up to the immortal three words fell to Wieden & Kennedy, the Portland, Oregon-based ad agency that created the original campaign. The subsequent "I Can" is intended to take Nike's message away from the troubled world of sports endorsers that has been its marketing strategy for 15 years.

But was changing the advertising the answer? The sneaker maker went to another agency and asked it to face off with Wieden & Kennedy for the account. The resulting "I Can" slogan probably saved the business for Wieden, but what's the benefit for Nike?

One deviation that is bound to work is the new "Got Milk?" campaign. The slogan is turning out to be the "Where's the Beef?" of the '90s, and while new ads take a different direction, they keep the well-known refrain. As good as the ads have been, they started to get obvious. "You could see the end coming," said Jeff Manning of the California Milk Processor Board, which pays for the ads. The new work gives us the fictional town of Drysville, where there is no milk and, sings a twangy Iris Dement sound-alike, "My corn flakes are cardboard, cake tastes like a sweater."

This new campaign is an evolution of a slogan, not an execution. And it saves the equity that the advertising has built up. Some of the aforementioned brands might have given a sweeping new ad direction some more thought before throwing out something old and valuable for something new and, well, new. ✦

Gallic Gastronomy

By J. Charles Mokriski

Clio's culinary craftsmanship is simple and elegant

A RECENT DINING EXPERIENCE IN BOSTON put me in mind of how my love affair with fine cuisine began. It was 1964, and I had just enjoyed my first encounter with classic French cuisine. It was an epiphany. Vegetables—which in my house had been a rather perfunctory affair, from can to pot to table—in France were exquisite, tender but firm, capturing the flavor and freshness of the garden. Sauces were superb, based on reductions of intensely flavored cooking juices and broths. Even the humble omelet was a work of art.

My recent visit to Clio reminded me of this gustatory awakening. Clio's presentations are simple but elegant, true visual delights—not the four inch high, jumbled parodies of abundance that have become a Boston restaurant signature. Clio's preparations are creative. Its breads are crusty classic French rolls and baguettes from Iggy's of Watertown.

Clio carries out its culinary craftsmanship in simple but elegant surroundings. The decor is white and gray, with a splash of color provided by handsome prints and a huge poster. Two large framed mirrors give an aura of spaciousness to this cozy, 50-seat dining room. Recessed ceiling lighting and large teak floor lamps with big shades provide adequate but soothing illumination. Tables and banquettes are deftly arranged to afford maximum comfort and privacy, aided by strategic placement of flower arrangements and service tables.

Clio's staff is young and a little inexperienced, which resulted in a distressingly long wait when we arrived early one Sunday evening. After this initial gaffe, however, service was attentive and efficient. The wine list is imaginative, with a variety of selections not often encountered in Boston area restaurants. We were delighted to encounter Mas de la Dame ($26), a robust, earthy Provencale red that hails from vineyards that lie at the foot of Les Baux, a formidable redoubt atop a rocky promontory north of Marseilles.

Clio's appetizers were at a uniformly high level. A puree of sweet corn soup with mushrooms, fingerling potatoes and corn tuile ($8) was the perfect antidote to a raw December day. Warm in temperature as well as flavor, it was thick, mellowly sweet and studded with crunchy celery and velvety mushrooms. A salad of mixed field greens ($7) was more austere, bathed only lightly in a lemon, herb and virgin olive oil dressing, but the fresh array of greens, each distinctive in taste and texture, was a refreshing treat.

The best of our appetizer choices was the Carnaroli risotto with preserved lemon, sweet garlic and crispy frog legs ($13). Inured to the oversized portions one usually encounters, we were at first taken aback by the tiny mound of risotto and four diminutive frog legs that appeared. Our first concern was that if portions of this size were replicated throughout the menu, Clio could have public relations problems in a city where restaurant portions appear designed to satisfy the appetites of stevedores. In fact, the risotto was so rich and creamy that a larger portion would have been too much, particularly as an appetizer.

Clio's main courses were quite substantial in size by any reasonable standard. The grilled hanger steak with roasted bone marrow, 17 vegetables and ragout of wild mushrooms ($24) was intensely flavorful. Rare as ordered, it seemed, paradoxically, like a rich, rare pot roast. Garlic-rubbed organic chicken served with cassoulet of autumn vegetables ($21), boasted a crisp, garlicked skin and moist flesh. The accompanying small copper casserole of potato gnocchi, roasted garlic cloves, carrots, green beans and pearl onions, enlivened with bacon chunks, reminded me of those delectable vegetables first encountered in France 30-some years ago. A pan-seared tournado of lotte ($22), a moist slab of firm-fleshed white fish, served on a large bone, was superlative. The honey-basted braised endive and citrus vinaigrette on which the lotte was served achieved an almost magical combination of tastes—the sweetness of the honey contrasting with the natural bitterness of endive and the citric tang of grapefruit and orange.

On the dessert front, Clio offers an assortment of sweets and cheeses. The chocolate malt parfait ($8), designed to dazzle all but the most jaded chocoholics, consisted of a dark chocolate goblet filled with malted chocolate parfait and a soupcon of caramelized banana, garnished with whipped cream and creme anglais.

Clio evokes fond memories of French dining experiences in another way. The profession of innkeeper in France is a noble one, and French hotels, particularly those sprinkled around the countryside, are justly proud of their kitchens. In the US, the restaurant function in hotels is often as pedestrian and perfunctory as is the phrase used to describe it, "food service." There are exceptions, and Clio, in the Eliot Hotel, is a welcome addition. ✦

WINE

Tannin Trend

By Sandy Block

'98's preeminent potable is port, by any definition

When a radio interviewer recently asked me what I thought the hottest trend was in wine, I answered, without hesitation, "port." Older vintages have become practically unobtainable, current releases are trading like growth stocks in a runaway market and suddenly it seems that every restaurant or wine store you walk into is displaying an elaborate range of labels and styles.

There's one problem. The terminology used to describe different categories of port is incredibly confusing, even to wine professionals. Without knowing what the terms mean it's easy to buy one type of port when you're expecting another.

Although vintage port attracts most of the attention, it represents just two percent of total production in the Douro. Each port company decides whether it wants to produce a vintage wine with the grapes of a particular harvest, or whether it will use them for blending. Today vintage ports are often made to drink after about 10 to 12 years, whereas traditionally they require decades to soften. But these are the most difficult ports to serve. A thick, sludge-like sediment forms inside each bottle which must be removed by decanting. In addition, the wine deteriorates once the bottle's been open a few days. This type of port's lusciously rich berry, spice and chocolate flavors complement Stilton cheese to perfection. (Price range: $35 to $60 and up.)

Single quinta port is an unblended wine made from a port shipper's top estate property in a harvest that is good but not up to the standard of a vintage year. Although less expensive ($25 to $35), it also must be decanted and quickly loses its freshness once the bottle's opened. A more supple, pricewortby and mellow substitute for vintage port, drink it by itself after dessert.

Each of the following categories matures in cask not bottle. While none improves over time, these ports remain drinkable after you open the bottle and none requires decanting. Their flavors are consistent from year to year, unlike vintage ports which always vary.

Ruby port is the least expensive cask-matured port ($8 to $12). These spicy, somewhat candylike wines are blends using moderate quality grapes that are aged for less than three years before bottling. Ideal accompiment to fruits and hard cheeses.

Vintage character is the best ruby port, using the finest quality grapes aged up to six years. They are designed as vintage character, meaning that they share a stylistic affinity with vintage port. Richer and more concentrated in flavor, with more vigorous tannins than basic rubies, these are often outstanding values ($12 to $15).

Tawny is gentler, browner in color and less fiery than ruby port. Tawnies are consumed more in Europe, where they're often lightly chilled and used as apertifs. Aged in small casks, they're sweet and tangy but never heavy, with chestnut, tangerine and caramel-like flavors. Serve with fruit or chocolate desserts—or try a glass before dinner ($8 to $12).

Aged tawny remains in small casks for up to 40 years, losing color and becoming more concentrated. Fuller in aroma, smokier and somewhat toffee-like in flavor, these silky textured wines are often considered the finest by the Portuguese themselves. The wines are designated as 10, 20, 30 or 40 year- old, with a significant jump in price at each increment ($25 to $100). Enjoy them with walnuts or chocolate.

Late bottled vintage is made from grapes harvested in one particular year. LBVs are aged almost exactly like a vintage character. They're priced a bit higher ($18 to 22) and are a big hit in restaurants. Savor a glass of this milder port after dinner. ✦

Roll out the welcome matte for Yves Saint Laurent.

Pout Perfection

For the past two years a panel of more than 30 women and two drag queens has been searching tirelessly for the Holy Grail of pout perfection—a long-lasting, non-drying matte lipstick that is sumptuously colored and doesn't feather out. And, damn it, they found it.

Yves Saint Laurent Lip Definition leaves all the other tested brands of long lasting lip rouge in the dust. YSL's color selection is beyond elegant, and Lip Definition stays where you put it, barely budging after 12 hours of kissing and telling.

For 35 bucks, you get movie star lip pigment in the best cosmetic packaging ever invented. When you whip the built-in lip brush out of the gold, mirrored container, you'll feel like a cool million with a cherry on top.

Find Lip Definition at any YSL counter in fine department stores. If they don't have the color you are looking for, purchase the hue that is closest to your choice and fine tune it with a lip pencil in the shade you desire.

Stuck On You

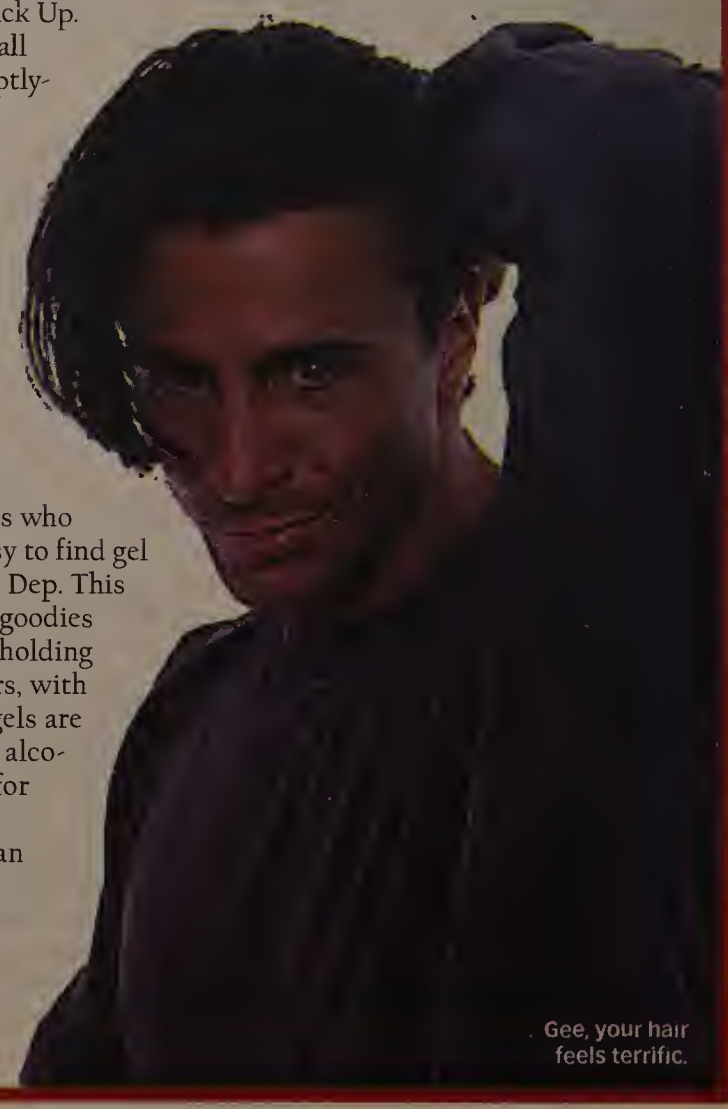
Don't give me static, or I'll give you sheet.

It's a waste to buy cans of static guard sprays when the solution to winter's clinging clothes is already lurking among your laundry supplies. If your poly-blend ensemble is sticking to you like Saran Wrap, spark a rebellion with a quick rub of a dryer static cling sheet. Try rubbing the sheet under the problem garment for extra protection.

Fragrance-free Bounce is a primo cling-eraser that won't leave you smelling like the launderette on the corner. Stash one in a zip-lock bag in your purse or wallet for quick control of flyaway hair-dos when you're away from home. Just run it over that Alberta Einstein halo of hair for a taming effect that's more than relative.

HAIR GELS FOR MEN

Come a little closer, love muffin, and let me recite some men's hair styling tips as I run my fingers through your manly mane.



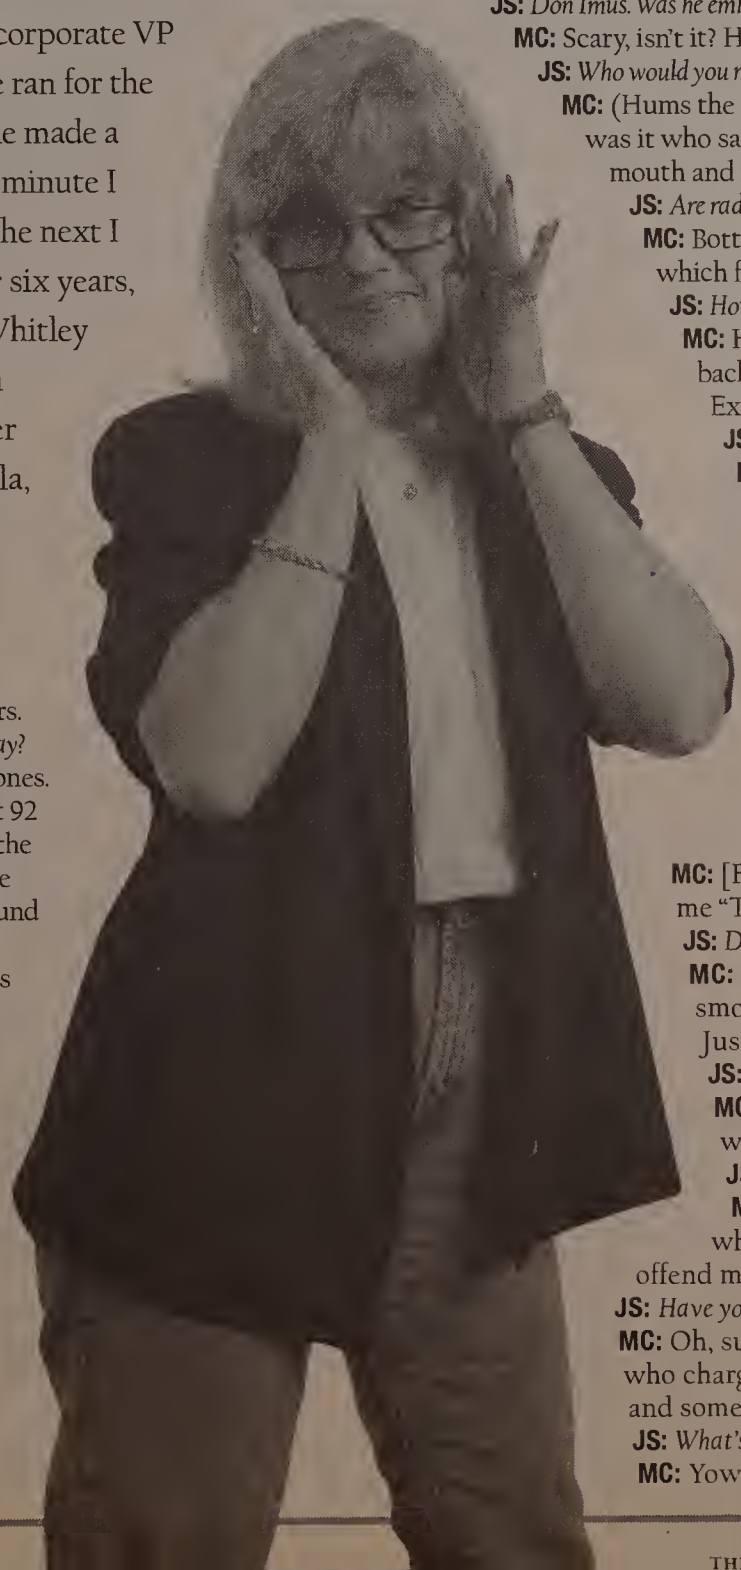
If your hair gels leave your locks stiff and crackly, or dry and flaky, try this homemade cure: Mix half your normal amount of gel in your palm with a quarter-sized dollop of hair conditioner before application. This is just the ticket for softer looks that still demand some sort of orderly hold—and for anyone with parched hair or scalp. Fiddle with the amount of conditioner to perfect your custom potion.

Laboring lads whose early morning gel application loses its oomph by lunchtime can refresh their style by running wet hands through their coif. This trick puts the slick back in your 'do, no matter which hair treatment you use.

When a close-cropped fellow slathers on the styling products, he really makes a strong impression...as a sleazy, veneered rat. Darling, please—when your hair is short, use less gel. Nobody wants to see sections of your scalp exposed between spikes of gooey hair. It's so—dare I say—Back Street Boys.

This year's noise in hair products is the Vain line, available at Newbury Comics. Misters who want Super Glue hold without the Elmer's Glue-colored flakes that plague too many gel-users will value Vain's tight-gripping Stick Up. When used in small amounts, Vain's aptly-named Dirty Boy, Dirty Girl gives hair that less-than-clean, sexily messy look. Dab on more, and slick your way back to a Cary Grant shine. Dirty Boy, Dirty Girl is Pia's pick for pomades.

Discount dudes who want a cheap, easy to find gel should say yep to Dep. This line of drugstore goodies gives great head, holding your coif for hours, with no flaking. Dep gels are water-based and alcohol-free—great for dandruff-prone dandies. Less than three bucks gets you a bottle big enough to slick back every Euro-mane at M-80.



Gee, your hair feels terrific.

By JONATHAN SOROFF

Soroff/ On MARJORIE CLAPPROOD

MARJORIE CLAPPROOD WAS BORN IN BOSTON AND RAISED IN A BIG HOUSE in Brookline, until her father died, when the family moved to the Whiskey Point projects—"more than a change of Zip Code," she recalls. A graduate of Brookline High, she dropped out of UMass to get married and eventually had two children. While working in healthcare, she attended Stonehill College at night, and from 1971 to 1979, she went from being a secretary to the first female corporate VP at Neponset Valley Health Systems. In 1983, she ran for the state legislature and served until 1990, when she made a failed bid to become lieutenant governor. "One minute I was picking out curtains for the corner office, the next I was on radio, going, 'Caller, are you there?'" For six years, she worked for WRKO, paired first with Pat Whitley and more recently with Tai. She and the station parted company on January 1. Divorced from her first husband, she is married to Chris Spinazzola, who heads his family's food-related charitable foundation, and they live in Sharon.

Jonathan Soroff: What's your next career move?
Marjorie Clapprood: For the immediate future, I'm focusing on a book I've been working on for the past three years.
JS: When you were a kid, and other kids teased you, what did they say?
MC: Why do we have to go there? Okay, they called me Bones. I was 5'6" by the end of seventh grade and weighed about 92 pounds. I also had a disorder with my jaw that made me the perfect specimen for the Tufts dental class of 1967. But the worst thing they called me was "Wellie." That's how I found out we were on welfare. It was a horrible assault on my dignity, but my mother somehow managed to convince us that we were lace curtain Irish, although I never saw any of the Kennedys on line for food stamps.
JS: What did you want to be when you grew up?
MC: President of the United States or a Solid Gold dancer.
JS: True or false—you married Chris for his cooking.
MC: Partially true. He's a great cook but there are things he does even better.
JS: Like?
MC: None of your business.
JS: What's the best perk of being a state rep?
MC: The parking. My space was in between the Speaker and Kitty Dukakis. She once had my car towed because I accidentally took her spot.
JS: Tell me a secret about the State House.
MC: Well, the coffee sucks. Oh, and they used to play poker in the ante-chamber. Once, [former speaker] George Keverian called me up to the podium and handed me a roll of bills, saying, "Can you take this out there? One of the boys ran short."
JS: Can you believe that you got paid just to go "Blah, Blah, Blah," on the radio?
MC: I know! I once said to Governor Weld, "I work a quarter of the hours you do and get paid four times as much. Is this a great country, or what?"
JS: Howard Stern—any thoughts?
MC: He's just a very successful nerd.
JS: Don Imus. Was he embalmed while we weren't looking?
MC: Scary, isn't it? He's got the face for radio.
JS: Who would you most like to embarrass publicly?
MC: (Hums the theme song to Jeopardy) I'll go with Kathie Lee. Who was it who said, "Better to be thought an idiot than to open your mouth and remove all doubt"?
JS: Are radio executives the lowest life form?
MC: Bottom feeders! Let's see—lobsters feed on brine shrimp, which feed on plankton, which feed on radio executives.
JS: How do you feel about WRKO?
MC: Here's what I said to Tai my last day: Watch your back. Watch your front. And lock your friggin' desk. Except I didn't say friggin'.
JS: What's the last funny thing you heard?
MC: At a party last weekend, (Channel 5 news anchor) Brian Leary said to me, "If a guy is in the middle of the forest and there are no women around to hear him, is he still an idiot?"
JS: Is fat-free a synonym for sawdust?
MC: No. Styrofoam.
JS: How much older are you than your husband?
MC: Old enough to have babysat for him. Actually, when I turned 46 in September and he was still 39, I was shrieking, "Hurry up! Get old!"
JS: Would you describe yourself as a broad, a babe or a lady?
MC: [Former attorney general] Frank Bellotti once called me "The best babe in politics," and I loved it.
JS: Do you ever put makeup on while driving?
MC: Always. I put on makeup and pantyhose, while smoking a cigarette and drinking a cup of coffee. Just ask the state police.
JS: Are diamonds really a girl's best friend?
MC: If not, they're a good thing to fall back on when the car gets repossessed.
JS: Fur—pro or con?
MC: I don't own any, but if it died a natural death, why not? A mink that willed her pelt to me wouldn't offend me.
JS: Have you ever consulted a psychic?
MC: Oh, sure. But there's a difference between a charlatan who charges $9.99 a minute to tell you how lonely you are, and somebody with real insight.
JS: What's the meaning of life?
MC: Yow! Leaving it better than you found it. ✦

EARTHQUAKE

Boston's high energy, big money nightclub owners look at city hall warily and worry about their liquor and entertainment licenses. The mayor insists "there's nothing to fear from me," but the recent spate of punishments levied against a handful of Boston's most profitable and popular clubs tells another story. What's at stake? The local economy, and Boston's viability as a world-class draw for international tourists.

BY JOSHUA RESNEK

IN PARADISE

IT'S LATE AT NIGHT AT AXIS, ON Lansdowne Street, Boston's 'club row,' one chilly weeknight in early December.

Mobs of young people move in a menage of blinding light, deafening music and billowing smoke.

Off the dance floors, a maze of corridors and stairways lead to more rooms, again, filled with young people milling about in a purple haze, drinking and listening to the music.

If you haven't been, it's impossible to adequately describe the primal bass rumble in the music, which reverberates with the thud of dinosaur steps, the kind of sound you'd hear in a Spielberg movie.

From the stage overlooking the dance floor at Axis, Patrick Lyons and his brother John gaze upon the swelling crowd inside their flagship entertainment vessel.

They are confident men, brought up in Buffalo, N.Y., by their mother after their father left when they were infants. Patrick, 44, is the big guy, the corporation's durable and resilient public face, although John, at 6'5" towers over him.

Patrick never went to college. He wasn't a rich kid growing up. As a teenager he worked in a bar in Buffalo because he needed the money.

He caught the eye of big-time nightclub managers and was brought here to manage the club Boston-Boston 20 years ago.

What Lyons began in 1979 when he bought the nightclub Spit has been parlayed into 23 clubs and restaurants, an entertainment juggernaut constantly remaking itself, and growing.

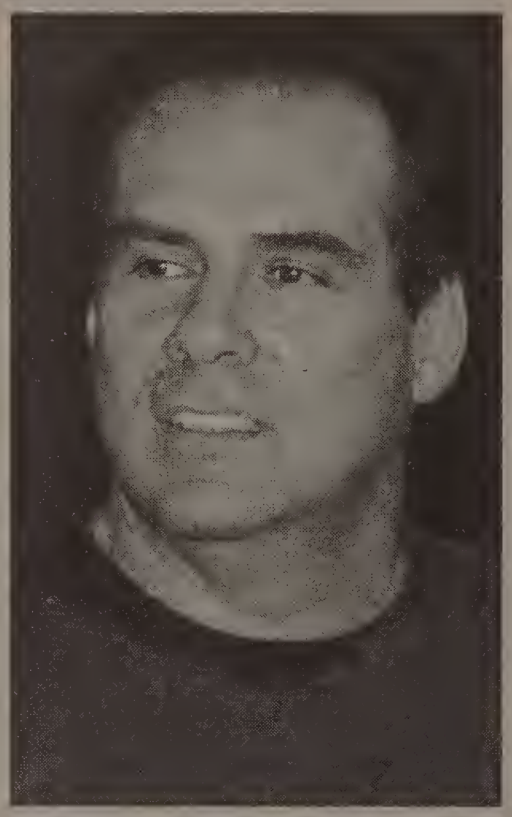
The Lyons' dance clubs throughout the city—Avalon, Axis, Alley Cat, Big Easy, to name but a few—are as well run, managed, safe, businesslike and legal, as they can make them.

Their popular Newbury Street restaurant, Sonsie, is impeccably appointed and noticeably well managed.

On this December night, Avalon, Axis' lusty sister-ship next door, is also grinding out another successful businessday.

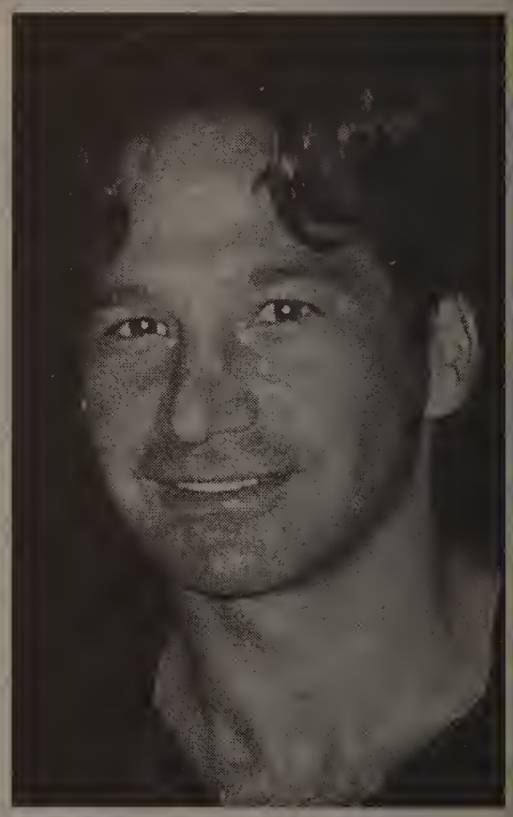
Forty or so managers, crowd control experts, special detail Boston police and additional staff, numbering about 200, make their rounds amid a crowd of thousands.

What the Lyons brothers cannot see through the fog-shrouded light show, what sophisticated radar would be unable to detect, is what some of their customers were doing on the sly.



In this respect, they share a burden with liquor and entertainment license holders like the Ritz-Carlton, the Four Seasons or Restaurant Zinc. In all those fine places, only a stripsearch by police would reveal who was carrying an illegal substance.

This is the haunting caveat for club owners, restaurateurs and hoteliers active in the sector of the entertainment scene in Boston.



Owners are inevitably held responsible for the illegal actions of their customers.

Complicating the difficulties of doing business are the seemingly incquitable rulings by Boston's competing licensing commissions, and the selective enforcement standard applied by the Boston Police Department.

Records show that while police have worked their fingers to the bone writing up hundreds of violations against the row of clubs lining Lansdowne Street, not a single violation, write-up, warning or suspension has been written or issued since 1987 against the licensees who own Fenway Park and the Red Sox.

That's an unusually clean record for an entertainment facility that serves alcohol to 15,000 to 20,000 people each time the ballclubs take the field.

The record's extraordinary cleanliness is magnified when one considers that more than 28 million people have attended ball games at Fenway Park since 1987—without a single incident, if one believes the records.

The Boston Garden-FleetCenter record at the Boston Licensing Board is also unblemished. Not a single police report, warning, violation or suspension has been issued since 1990. The FleetCenter runs 250 events in a year.

By contrast, consider what has happened lately to the major nightlife players. In the past two months, Lyons' club Axis had its license suspended for three days (meaning the place was forced to close), received six months probation and still faces discipline from the attorney general and the state. Seth Greenberg's Paradise Club received 35 days' suspensions and still must face the state. And Joe Cimino's Daisy Buchanan's got a two-day suspension—its first in 10 years.

LIKE BROTHERS AND SISTERS ENGAGED IN sibling rivalry, the governor-appointed Boston Licensing Board competes with the mayor's Office of Consumer Affairs and Licensing, to see who is being tougher on the entertainment clubs, a burgeoning industry almost as vital as tourism itself.

The Licensing Board issues "pouring licenses" (then okayed by the state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission). The mayor's entity, often called the Entertainment Board, issues licenses for everything from a TV in the corner, a live band, comedian or amusing artwork. If either of these licenses is pulled, the establishment is effectively closed down.

The Lansdowne nightlife operations are one of Boston's biggest

In the emerging world economic situation, tourism to Boston will not expand further without more entertainment, restaurants, bars and clubs.

According to Patrick Moscaritolo, the president of the Greater Boston Convention and Visitors Bureau, entertainment is drawing millions of overseas tourists, conventioneers and students, and they are pouring hundreds of millions more tourist dollars into the local economy.

"The entertainment business is crucial to our long-term success," said Moscaritolo.

He believes the sky is the limit. Experience has shown him more entertainment translates directly into more tourists, more revenues, more jobs more restaurants, more nightclubs, ad infinatum.

"Entertainment, nightlife, great restaurants and dance clubs—these are the most critical parts of an overall sell if Boston is to establish itself as an international destination," he said.

money-making businesses.

"If we didn't have a Patrick Lyons, we'd have to go out and invent one."

Moscaritolo's hyperbole doesn't necessarily find fertile territory in some quarters of city hall, however.

Moscaritolo "ought to sit down and try talking with Entertainment Board chairperson Nancy Lo," said a Boston lawyer familiar with the licensing procedure, who wished to remain unnamed.

He said Moscaritolo's comments about the city's economic future being tied to the expansion and development of more entertainment would be utterly lost on Lo.

"Lo is someone who breaks something that doesn't need to be fixed," he added. "She ought to wake up and do the right thing."

stomachs, were busy shopping, but not for t-shirts or memorabilia available at a small shop on the premises.

Under the noses of so many eyes hired to watch, some of their customers and some important others, State Police passing themselves off as rave dancers (invited to attend by Attorney General Scott Harshbarger), bought the designer drugs Ecstasy, Special K and Calvin Klein from a dealer in a corner booth just off the crowded dance floor.

The dealer in the corner booth helped the ravers to achieve mild hallucinations, delirium, excitement and euphoria, a situation, not so different really, as hundreds of avid younger Red Sox fans, who get shit-faced on $6 beers, and smoke joints in the bleachers, at a Saturday night ballgame, and who later stumble out of Fenway Park by the thousands onto Lansdowne Street, and Brookline Avenue, and into Kenmore Square, some of them howling and occasionally brawling.

Ravers visited the dealers throughout the night at a number of locations on Lansdowne Street, and so too did the undercover drug officers.

William Donoghue, a twentysomething state trooper, bought drugs at Axis and said he observed drugs being sold furtively inside the club.

He said the drugs were held under a standup table by the dealer, an Axis patron, named Scott McNeil. Other patrons came to McNeil, placed money in his hand, and got something in their hands in return from him, then disappeared onto the dance floor, according to Donoghue.

The tall, gangly trooper, with short-cropped red hair, who testified before the Licensing Board, said he also heard three men making snorting sounds behind a closed stall in the men's room, while an Axis bouncer was inside the men's room.

Later, Donoghue alleged he asked that Axis bouncer if it was all right "if I did a line in the bathroom."

The bouncer told him to "Go upstairs. 'Cause if the other bouncers see you doing that, they'll throw you out," he said.

The Axis bust came down later that night. When the Lyons' learned about it, they privately bemoaned their fate. They knew what would follow.

The Lyons brothers paid $9 million in wages last year to nearly 1,000 employees. Industry analysts say their combined entertainment operations may have grossed as much as $60 million in 1997.

Over the years, they've become inured to the second-class citizenship they receive from city officials, who treat the entertainment business as a stepchild that needs to be repeatedly warned, and occasionally beaten.

The way it works in Boston is licensees are cited by the police for a violation. Then they are called before the Licensing Board for a hearing and disciplining, followed by a hearing and disciplining before the Entertainment Board, followed by either a third hearing before the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission, or an appeal to that commission, or onto the Superior Court.

Five Boston lawyers interviewed for this piece, none of whom wished to be named, were unanimous in the expressed belief that the Licensing Board was a better punishment venue than Nancy Lo's board, which, they agreed, is "Draconian."

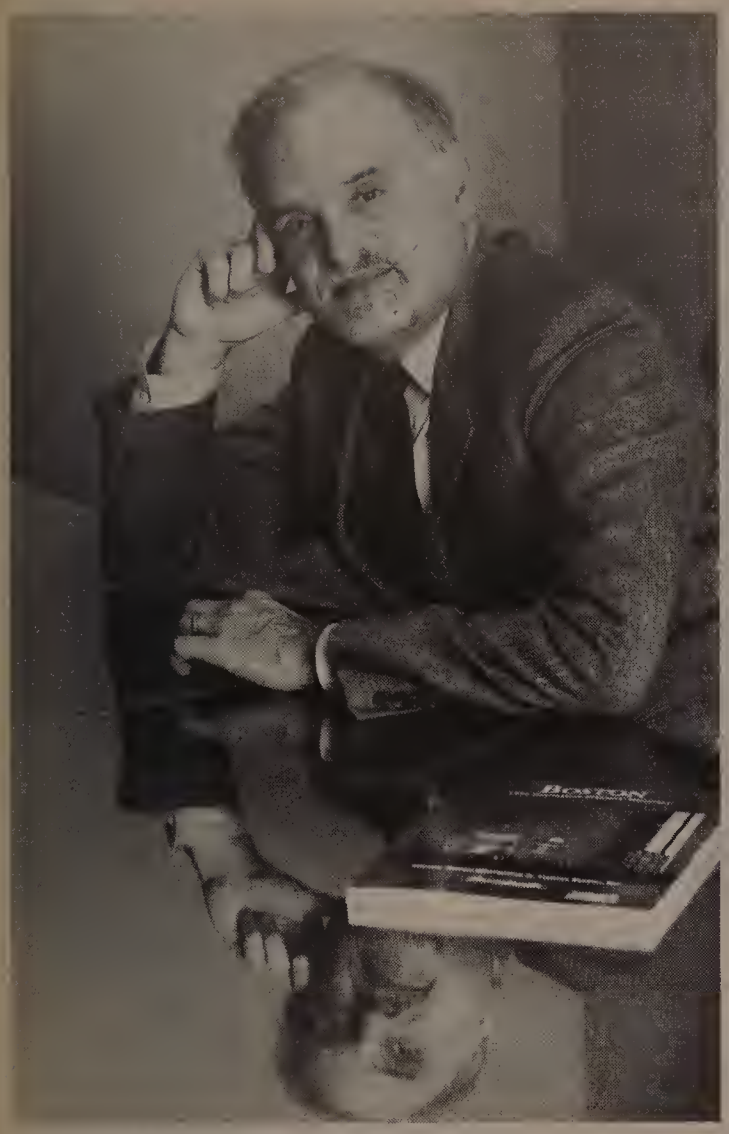
All of them pointed to a 30-day suspension the Entertainment Board handed down before Christmas against the Paradise as proof perfect for their opinions.

Meanwhile, the mayor's office tried to downplay the growing public perception that all of the jostling aimed at the dance clubs was political, or personal, or both, which, of course, it is.

Some political observers were shocked when Mayor Menino held his January 5 inaugural party at Avalon, a Lyons club on Lansdowne.

Joseph Maher, Menino's finance chairman and an officer of nonprofit organization running the mayor's inauguration events, asked Patrick Lyons to donate services—sound, lighting and other production costs, which amounted to $3,000 to $5,000.

Lyons was only too happy to oblige.



When he stepped onto the stage in front of hundreds of his supporters who gathered at Avalon for the inaugural party, Menino, referring to the Patriots' fiasco at Paradise, quipped, "There will be no mosh pit for me. I'm not taking a dive off this stage for anyone."

For sure, it was a well-behaved gang at Avalon that night, with Livingston Taylor crooning, as opposed to rave-babies swooning. But good natured mayoral quips can't make up for the bureaucratic overkill that is the inevitable product of overlapping jurisdictions, and selective enforcement.

"It is important for city officials to understand the impact of entertainment. Our survey data shows that the visitor industry here can be one of the top five industries in the city," said Moscaritolo.

The ambition and dreams of the entertainment industry, he added, should dovetail with that of Mayor Menino, who says he wants Boston to be a world class city.

November had been the cruelest month, what with the embarrassing and costly Drew Bledsoe, et al., mosh pit year-old woman whose back was allegedly injured when someone landed on her head after diving from the stage, sued Bledsoe, two other Patriots and, of course, the club.

The Licensing Board had handed out suspensions to Axis and Avalon, and to the Paradise for assaults, disturbances, underage drinking and double parking in the weeks before the mosh pit affair.

The Entertainment Board was on deck. It handed the Paradise a 30-day suspension, the rough equivalent of being sent to prison for two years for possession of a joint.

Almost 200 employees were put out of work before the holiday. Greenberg's loss of approximately $500,000 in revenues was a fait accompli, making the suspension "an atomic attack," as one attorney put it.

affair, at Seth Greenberg's Commonwealth Avenue music club, the Paradise. That club, plus M-80, were purchased from Greenberg's former partners and mentors, the Lyons.

Taking a page from the Lyons', Greenberg, now 35, reconfigured the Paradise, and transformed it into one of the most important new music concert halls, and he breathed new life into M-80, which became the exclusive club for the city's Euro students, and the very rich.

The club insisted that mosh pit diving wasn't allowed or condoned (which was clearly the case).

Greenberg claimed the club should not be liable for what Bledsoe and company allegedly did, any more than the 99 Restaurant in Charlestown was at fault for not providing adequate safety precautions on the night four North End patrons were gunned down while eating dinner. (The 99 did, indeed, receive a "write-up" because of a "homicide on the premises," according to police.)

"Who would have expected Bledsoe to dive over a four foot steel stage rail?" Greenberg said recently with wonder. "How could we possibly have stopped this from happening short of being clairvoyant?"

Ultimately, Tamika Messier, the 23-

The Licensing Board later added yet another suspension, five days' worth, for the Paradise.

Although the Licensing Board chairwoman Ellen Rooney will not admit it, a newer, tougher policy of regulation and more severe punishment appears to be being implemented towards the nightclubs.

Rooney was appointed by Gov. Weld to a six-year term after serving with the state's Office of Business Development. Governors of Massachusetts have been the appointing authority of Boston's Licensing Board since the Legislature took that right away from the mayor in 1906.

"We don't want people breaking the law," Rooney said.

Nancy Lo, the mayor's entertainment licensor, refused to talk.

Seth Greenberg still cannot get over the drubbing he took from Lo, 34, who was formerly a policy adviser to Menino.

Some in the political and nightlife venues say Greenberg asked for trouble, flaunting a jet-set cover-boy style at a time when his clubs were under scrutiny by public officials.

But he is angry and fed up trying to make sense out of what happened that night that cost him a 30-day suspension.

"We had 22 security people on duty, as well as police details, an undercover drug officer that we employ, and a 20-camera surveillance system the night Bledsoe dove into the crowd," Greenberg said.

"The show was over. They were invited on stage by the band. How was anyone to know they'd jump over the steel guardrail?" he repeated.

Alan Eisner: Voice of reason.

The major players in the club scene say they are maintaining a much higher standard inside their establishments than any of the boards might have required.

They are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for police details, security, for strong management and proactive safety measures, and for strident anti-drug policies.

After the Paradise suspension, club owners were feeling set upon, although to a person, none were willing to articulate publicly anything that rang with honesty about the brand of treatment they're receiving from the licensing boards.

"I don't know one nightclub owner that doesn't feel besieged," said a lawyer who often appears before the Licensing and Entertainment boards.

Patrick Lyons, seated in his cluttered, second floor office at 7 Lansdowne Street, at the head of the suite of his administrative offices holding about 35 employees, nonetheless appears sanguine.

"Things are changing towards the entertainment industry. The pendulum is swinging. People are talking. Dialogue is what's important," Lyons said, deliberatively.

THE NEW YEAR STARTED OFF WITH A BANG, with the reluctant retreat from the territory he previously occupied, by the city's dance club, restaurant, glamour titan, Seth Greenberg.

Greenberg says he is throwing in the towel on the younger end of the night-club business.

"I'm done. That's it. I can't take it anymore. I'm at the point where I don't want to be in the business," he said.

The problems at the Paradise have stung him. The club that paved his way to success, has been draining him.

"I'm still going to be in business, here," he said.

"M-80 will be better than it ever was, so will the Paradise," Greenberg promised. But the nightlife prodigy who was all about fabulousness, and how to sell it, said things are changing.

"It's over for me. I'm passing it on to a new regime," he added.

Although he hesitated to divulge details about his business life, he made it clear that he's handing over the management of M-80 and the Paradise to others within his organization.

He says he's not bitter, but he clearly is. He insists he's not filled with despair, but he is. He's unwilling to publicly point an angry finger at officials, because, like everyone else interviewed for this article, he's concerned about retribution.

Greenberg has come full circle to the place where many club owners find themselves after years of giving their energy to a business fraught with liability, and risk.

"I don't care now. I won't fight it. I'm out. I'm done. I'm not going to stay in the business. I've removed myself and I'm gone," he added.

What about the Fashion Cafe that Greenberg was going to create?

"I'm out of that. I have nothing to do with it anymore."

Still, the opening of his new club, Aria, scheduled for this month, but slated to attract an older, perhaps more 'regulated' crowd than the Paradise or M-80, remains on tap. And his popular, posh restaurant Mistral thrives. And his plans to co-develop the Alexander Hotel on Beacon Hill stay alive. Greenberg also owns a club in Southampton, N.Y.

EMPIRES RISE AND EMPIRES FALL, BUT, overall, Boston's major club owners say business is booming.

John Lyons says he and his brother are looking to the future.

"We will shortly be redoing our Lansdowne Street clubs," John Lyons said. "We will build lifelike animated figures, and a far more exotic and intriguing light show into Axis and Avalon." He said the animated figures inside the clubs will represent a revolutionary interactive element to the music, light and dancing now there.

"Business has never been better," said the Roxy's part owner, Jack Gateman.

At 60, Gateman is at the stage where he's 30 years older than most of his customers. He drinks. He smokes Camels. He eats shrimp cocktails. He holds court inside the club, or down the street at Il Panino, where he's a partner.

Gateman's rise to prominence is a trip that took him from an obscure insurance agency he owned on Everett Avenue in Chelsea, to a decade of deal-making and finagling, to a mature place as a stable influence in the club scene.

"At this point in the business, I know what to do and what to expect. There aren't a lot of surprises. It's a very volatile business, and not nearly as glamorous as people perceive. It's a business, not an experience," he said.

Kevin Troy, the affable co-owner of Jillian's with partner Steve Foster, have put the future on display.

Their entertainment "theme club" fits for adults, and fits for little kids. The adults playing pool, or virtual reality, or video games like Daytona Beach, or Wave Runner at night on Friday are replaced with kids celebrating family birthday parties on Saturday.

Industry sources estimate that this Lansdowne Street operation, featuring three floors of entertainment, pulled in $10 million last year, making Jillian's perhaps the largest grossing entertainment center in Boston besides Fenway Park and the FleetCenter.

"I'm a very happy man. I love my business and business has been great," said Troy, 42, the son of a Boston cop, and the nephew of famed Boston criminal attorney, Thomas Troy.

Foster's father was a Boston city councilor, a state rep and a judge, A. Frank Foster.

On an average Friday night, or Saturday, Jillian's staffs about 120 employees, including 12 managers per shift.

"Jillian's has the highest ratio of employees to customers in Boston," said Troy, who is also a partner in the flashy Mercury Bar by the Alley.

"In 10 years, we've received only two violations, and we get 10,000 people coming and going here on a busy day," said Troy.

About six months ago, club owners did something rare and unexpected.

They united.

But they didn't unite out of a feeling of altruism, or a belief that by joining together they could make Boston safer for capitalism. They came together because of the hassles they were facing, and because they were scared.

There was the city's inhospitable nature, police details they were forced to pay even if the cops didn't show up. The mayor wouldn't allow more cabs. Without more cabs, more business was impossible. If the T couldn't run later, then how could college kids up and down the length of Commonwealth Avenue and Beacon Street get back home? And, of course, there was the escalating difficulties with the regulatory boards.

About 60 clubs turned to George Regan's public relations firm, and placed their faith in former Boston Herald executive editor, now Regan executive, Alan Eisner, to prove to them that there is power in numbers.

Eisner, 49, heads the new organization they formed, the Massachusetts Hospitality Association.

He's got his work cut out for himself if he thinks a hospitality organization promoting entertainment is going to sway the city boards from their perceived punishment agenda.

Still, Eisner is trying to change the distorted perception about people who own clubs, and what the clubs are about.

"Each club owner was saying, 'We get no respect,'" Eisner recalled. "The MHA is a voice for reason and cooperation. It's our job to show that Boston's entertainment entrepreneurs are not bad boys." ✦

Insider's Guide To The North End

The sauces now are sweeter, the residents richer, but the old world flavor still abounds, if you know where to go.

By Nini Diana

Photographs By Kristin DeLeo

IN THE MIDDLE TO LATE 1800S THE NORTH END WAS PRIMARILY AN IRISH NEIGHBORHOOD, with immigrants who'd fled the potato famine. Later, it housed many African-Americans and Jews. But since the turn of the century it has been decidedly Italian. At first, the residents were mostly men who came over from various parts of Italy to earn money and send it back to their families. These dislocated men clustered in mini regions within the neighborhood, which exist today. From block to block you can encounter families from Abruzzo, Tuscany, Sicily, Avellino or Sardinia.

Today, 75 to 100 of the restaurants in the North End are still maintained by second and third generation Italians whose families initially opened their homes to those men who were here trying to make a living. As time and economic realities progressed, the host families realized there was a profit to be made in the feeding of their neighbors.

Many of the dishes now enjoyed in the restaurants in the North End are variations on traditional Italian cuisine modified as the immigrants learned to cater to the American palate. For instance, while Europeans tend to eat salad at the end of the meal, Americans generally prefer it at the beginning. The sauces as well were changed to what they are now, a sweeter version of the real thing, a recipe that seems to please the tastes in this country. Even the vernacular changed: to Italians, what we call red sauce is gravy.

The biggest change came in the use of meat. When Italians first settled in Boston they were too poor to afford red meat or chicken. They reserved those specialties only for Sunday and then used the leftovers to fill ravioli, tortellini or manicotti. The American penchant for meat amended that. Eggplant Parmesan, a traditional dish, became veal or chicken Parmesan.

It is possible to find everything you need to create your own authentic Italian meal within the boundaries of this rich neighborhood. On any given day you can find an old woman, dressed in black because there's always someone to mourn for, speaking Italian to a shopkeeper and squeezing a squash to test it. Owners shout hello to friends passing on the street and everyone seems to know one another. In the North End they shop daily for the evening meal, as in Europe, to insure the freshest ingredients.

To one unfamiliar to the area there are a few ways to find your way around the narrow, winding streets. One is to follow the Freedom Trail, a mind-boggling journey along a red stripe. In the moment you lift your eyes from the ground you may catch sight of a bakery or two. Another, much more pleasurable, route is with Michele Topor, who leads an imaginative and informative tour around the neighborhood. Topor stops in many of the local shops, explaining the food, how it's used in the cuisine, how to store it and what the origins of some dishes are.

Topor admits to not having a drop of Italian blood in her and claims to not even have eaten a plate of spaghetti until she moved to the neighborhood nearly 20 years ago. Since then she traveled extensively in Italy, went to cooking school, learned the language and became an expert on Italian culture. She knows many of the local business people by name so can make introductions, and her tours, for $35, are carefully planned and thoroughly educational.

The brave soul can go it alone. With a map to guide you and an adventurous spirit it is possible to lose yourself in the magic of the neighborhood and even allow yourself to believe that you might be in Italy. Be prepared to find a cat in every store, lurking beneath the counter or skittering out the door as you open it.

Some of the most well known merchants are on Cross Street, the area that faces the Big Dig construction. Already this block has lost one of its most famous stores. Purity Cheese, in business since 1938, was bumped aside by construction. Up until the end of December, Purity made its ricotta and mozzarella in house. It is inarguably the best in town. Since the beginning of the year they have been making the cheese in Quincy and selling it out of Dan's Meat Market on Endicott Street.

Up the block a piece is the largest salumeria (sal-oo-MARE-ia), a delicatessen to you, in town. J. Pace (PA-chay) & Son has been at 42 Cross St. for nearly 35 years. Inside the store you can find every kind of Italian meat and cheese allowed in the United States, as well as the largest and most diverse selection of dried pasta around. These are things that can't be found in the local grocery store, they would be considered specialty items. Pace also sells special holiday items, as do most of the bakeries and greengrocers, including whole dried fish such as baccala (salt cod) and stock fish.

Workers at the store, including Joe Jr., whose father started the business, fear the repercussions of the dig this year. Between the loss of 900 parking spaces due to construction and meter maids who ticket with a vengeance, their customers have been reduced to waving as they drive by. The out-of-town shoppers, who make up a large percentage of Pace's clientele, just won't have anywhere to park. "It's going to be a bad year," says Joe.

Two doors down from Pace is Maria's Pastry Shop at 46 Cross St. It's owned by Maria Merola, who's worked there for 25 years and owned it since 1982. Merola runs the pasticerria (pasti-chair-IA) with her brother and her mother. Together they make everything in the tiny store from pastries to anise cookies to the marzipan fruit at Christmas. Maria herself makes all the special holiday cookies and pastries: the bones of the dead for All Souls Day on November 1 and the St. Joseph's zeppole for the upcoming St. Joseph's Day in March. She'll begin making the custard-filled fried dough confections at the end of January, but she won't make them a day past March 18, as the feast-day itself comes around.

Around the corner at 57 Salem St. is Dairy Fresh Candies, owned and operated for 41 years by Joe Matara and his family. Inside, the Pats game is on and the shelves hold every confection you could ever want. Pastry chefs from all over Boston come in to get the chestnut and almond flour, hard-to-find dried fruits and nuts and Mediterranean pignoli, which are longer and more flavorful than the Asian variety. There are also many things indigenous to Sicilian cuisine, which is influenced by North African fruits such as citrons and mangoes.

Daniel DiMare, Matara's nephew, is behind the counter. He's been working at the store since he was a little kid. The only thing that hasn't changed is Haymarket, where Joe Matara used to have a pushcart. Matara is now president of the Haymarket Association, whose space along the I-93 off-ramp is protected by law.

As you leave the store a handpainted sign reminds you to stay sweet.

Farther along Salem Street at number 81 is Frank Giuffre and Son, a pescheria (pes-care-IA) or fishmonger. Giuffre's has been in business since 1903 and is now run by Joe Giuffre, fourth generation. He's down at the docks by six in the morning, picking up the day's catch so he can open by eight. Like other local merchants, Giuffre stocks specialties for the holidays. Eel, a Christmas Eve tradition in many Italian homes, was in stock at the time.

A passerby might judge 85-89 Salem St. as just another True Value hardware store. Not so. Inside you will find everything you need to stock your kitchen, Italian style. Handpainted pottery and pizzelle (traditional butter cookies) bakers to bocce sets can be found here.

Pete Alfé and his friend, Robert Regnetta, own three storefronts on Salem Street. Both are Sicilian and their stores feature many specialties from the region. The first business is Biscotti's, a modest but wonderful bakery. Alfé's mother makes the pistachio macaroons herself, as well as the lemon cookies, the almond cookies and the chocolate hazelnut biscotti, all from family recipes.

Next door at Barocco, the Sicilian pottery shop, Alfé is printing out the menu for a special Valentine's Day dinner at the last of his three businesses, Ristorante Euno. The pottery shop grew out of a demand for more of what they were selling out of the bakery, he explains as we walk to the restaurant. The inside of the restaurant is decorated with roof tiles that Alfé lifted from his grandfather's farmhouse in Sicily. "They're 200 years old," he says. Everything seems to be that old, right down to the handpainted floor tiles.

Back out on the street, the Patriots game can be heard coming out of pizza parlors, bars and markets. Friends stop in to learn the score. At Polcari's Coffee on the corner of Salem and Parmenter streets, the game can be seen on a tiny and ancient black and white television. Ralph and Marie Polcari's father opened the store in 1932 and now the brother and sister run it with the help of three guys from the neighborhood, who have been working for the Polcaris since they were kids. "Ralph and Marie don't have kids of their own, so they have us," says one.

The stalls, shops and pushcarts of Haymarket are a constant, even protected by law (left). Pastry chefs from all over the city shop at Joe Matara's Dairy Fresh Candies (right).

The Polcari family is a mainstay of the North End. One branch owned the namestake restaurant on Commercial Street, one of the city's most popular eateries for decades until they moved to Saugus a few years ago. Another founded Pizzeria Regina, now a chain, but the North End original remains the best known and, say the experts, the best pizza place in town.

Polcari's Coffee, the oldest business on Salem Street, is full of bins that hold all the herbs and spices used in Italian cuisine. Huge chestnuts sit in one basket, red lentils in another, lima beans in yet another. Candy jars are filled with whole carob beans and licorice twigs, which old men chew for their digestion and, when the end frays, use as a toothpick. Open boxes hold small treats called "pasa tempo," which are simply dried vegetables and nuts eaten as snacks, like potato chips.

Across the street from Polcari's is one place left in the city to get quality fresh cut meats. Abruzzese butcher shop is owned by the father of one of the cooks at Olives and if he doesn't have what you're looking for you can take two steps up Parmenter Street to Sulmona. The two owners are best friends and can often be seen wandering the streets together.

The last storefront on the block before Salem meets Prince Street belongs to Monica Mendoza, who owns Monica's Salumeria and Monica's Restaurant on Prince Street. Mendoza, who is half Italian, said she was forced to leave Argentina with her family 15 years ago. They settled in the North End, due largely to Mendoza's Italian heritage.

It's half-time at the Pats game and customers run in to grab olive oil while the water is still boiling at home. All four of Mendoza's children work in the restaurant across the street and on this day her only daughter, Maria, sits with her in the salumeria greeting and chatting with customers.

"Everyone was out early today," says Maria who sits in a rattan chair, reading the paper. "It's because of the game," says her mother. As customers wander in and out Mendoza tells how many of the young professionals in the neighborhood stop in on their way home to pick up something to eat. In the evening, meals that are made at the restaurant are brought over and sold for take out. Mendoza is proud to say that she treats everyone like family—even the Yuppies that many old-line North Enders love to hate—she's even had parents come in and thank her for taking such good care of their children. "People come in and tell me everything," she says, "I don't know why."

As Salem Street turns lonely and takes a crooked turn toward the waterfront, you pass by Boschetto. This panetteria (pani-tear-IA), or bakery, has a 100-year-old brick oven that holds up to 150 loaves of bread at a time.

Down the hill, across Commercial Street on the waterfront is the North End playground. Three old men sit on a bench in front of the empty bocce courts, speaking Italian. A sign still hangs announcing the annual bocce tournament in August, and the courts are perfectly pressed, waiting for the weather to turn warm again and the players to return.

Back toward Commercial Wharf, Commercial Street cuts across Hanover, the best known and most active street in the North End. At number 415 is Ristorante Lucia, one of the oldest restaurants in the city. Across the street is Maurizio's, with authentic fare from Sardinia. Two doors down is Kennedy Studios. Obviously not Italian at all, but the shop owner commissioned New York artist Rhoda Ross to paint scenes of the neighborhood. Locals can be spotted in the paintings, going about their daily business or gossiping in front of the Graffiti Café on Hanover Street.

A busier street generally means more expensive stores. Hanover houses Salumeria Toscana, whose hours (and prices) are more specific to tourists, opening closer to lunchtime and staying open past dinner. Several of the bigger cafes are here: Florentine, where the younger crowd goes to schmooze and graze, Caffe Paradiso, which has the best gelato. At the corner of Hanover and Parmenter, arrows point the way to Venice, Florence and Naples.

Just two or three steps off Hanover, down Parmenter, is a tiny greengrocery owned by Bruce Alba (Al to the neighborhood). Alba goes every day to pick out fresh produce, including Italian specialties like cardones, a vegetable in the artichoke family. Alba worked here when the store was owned by his neighbor, Rosario, and when he decided to sell the business he sold it to Alba. The store still has the same old wood floors and monstrous pot-bellied stove from the cold-water flat days of the neighborhood.

When Parmenter crosses Hanover it becomes Richmond Street. On this short stretch, at 151 Richmond, sits Salumeria Italian, famous for its olives, capers, oils and vinegars. The olive oils and balsamic vinegars here cost 30-40 percent less than at other specialty stores around the country. It also carries olive oil soap, dried pastas and other small delicacies. The owner helps customers, speaking in Italian or heavily accented English, while other workers in the store point out the best olives for salad, the oil to use for cooking and the one to use on bread. A bell on the door rings constantly, announcing shoppers and friends who have come to gather ingredients for dinner.

No Italian meal would be complete without wine. In the North End there are two liquor stores that specialize in Italian wines. The first is Martignetti's on Cross Street; the other is Cirace at 173 North St. Owned by brother and sister Lisa and Jeff Cirace, third generation Italian-Americans, who are proud of their extensive stock of Italian wines, grappas, aperitivi and digestivi. Rare flavored grappas stand in beautiful handblown bottles. Every kind of digestive is here, including Fernet Branca, a thick licorice concoction that tastes rugged, but does the trick. The wines, from every region in Italy, are stocked in old wooden shelves built into the wall. It seems that the store is much the same as it was when it opened, complete with creaking floor and worn wooden countertops.

By late afternoon, the Patriots have lost the playoff game and many of the fresh food merchants are closing for the day. One last stop at Trio's at 222 Hanover St. finds the shelves nearly empty, all the freshly made pasta already gone. Trio's has been in business for 40 years and all the pasta is made in plain view of the customers in the back of the store. Flavored fettuccine, filled pastas and sauces can all be bought here, made as they are in the old country, by hand.

As the sun sets, the day's dust rises from the construction site. Shoppers run into Pace for last minute items before putting the final touches on the evening meal. There are two signs in the window, one reads "Take a Day Trip to Italy without the Jet Lag!" The other, "Save the North End." ✦

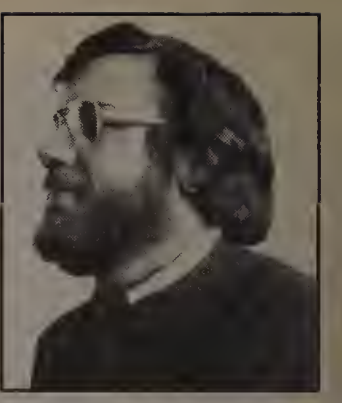
Think of a year so dysfunctional the number-one song was "Hello, I Love You, Won't You Tell Me Your Name."

THE YEAR THAT CHANGED AMERICA FOREVER

By Michael Goldman



It's time to introduce America to the notion of Year of the Century.

Sure, there are two possible calendar contenders yet to go, but I refuse to believe (wishful thinking?) '98 or '99 could eclipse my entry. So, let us today concede, by acclamation, this prized designation to the year 1968, a year that changed America forever.

Working without benefit of the century's most significant decisions or discoveries—no A-bomb, D-Day, Great War or Great Crash—1968 still managed to soar above its competitors. Taken together, its relentless parade of moments during 365 turbulent days dwarf the combined cultural and historical events in any competing year.

Illustration By Katherine Streeter

The author in 1967 (left) and 1968 (right), manifesting the way 'hairy people provided hairy moments to a harried generation grown haggard....'

BE IT SEX, RACE, CLASS, GENDER, fashion, art, music or manners, this extraordinary year provided what seemed to be continuous war between generational polar opposites, assaults that left our nation battered, breathless and with scars that remain to this day.

Or, put another way, hairy people, providing hairy moments to a harried generation grown haggard under the pressure of a social order in flux.

That was 1968.

Imagine, if you can, a time so volatile more than 31 million voters could conclude Richard Nixon was the right choice for President, while yet another nine million voters came to the conclusion that the man for the job was George Wallace, the former segregationist governor of Alabama.

Think of a year so dysfunctional that the number one summer love song was "Hello, I Love You, Won't You Tell Me Your Name."

Finally, ponder the possibilities of a year that produced four seminal cultural philosophies, each in conflict with the others, and with society.

"Make love, not war," shouted tens of thousands of college dissidents.

"We are the silent majority," claimed the 31 million who chose Nixon.

"Everyone will be famous for 15 minutes," promised Andy Warhol.

"Sock it to me," howled the cast of TV's Laugh-In.

Only in 1968. The Year of the Century.

There were, of course, signs of "normalcy." Women still made up only three percent of those attending law school and two percent of those attending medical school.

One could still purchase a classic wedding ring for $17.50; buy a wool sweater for $4.97; own a three-piece set of luggage for $47.60; or enjoy the magic of a four-speed phonograph, including automatic shut off, for only $38.95.

As 1968 began, no published dictionary provided either the definition or description for such products as cassettes, idiot lights, mace, motor homes, the morning after pill, pantyhose, radial ply tires, whiteout and woks. Also neglected were the definitions of such drug culture terminology as crash pad, dime bag, downies, dropout, funk art, light show, mind expanding, speed and STP.

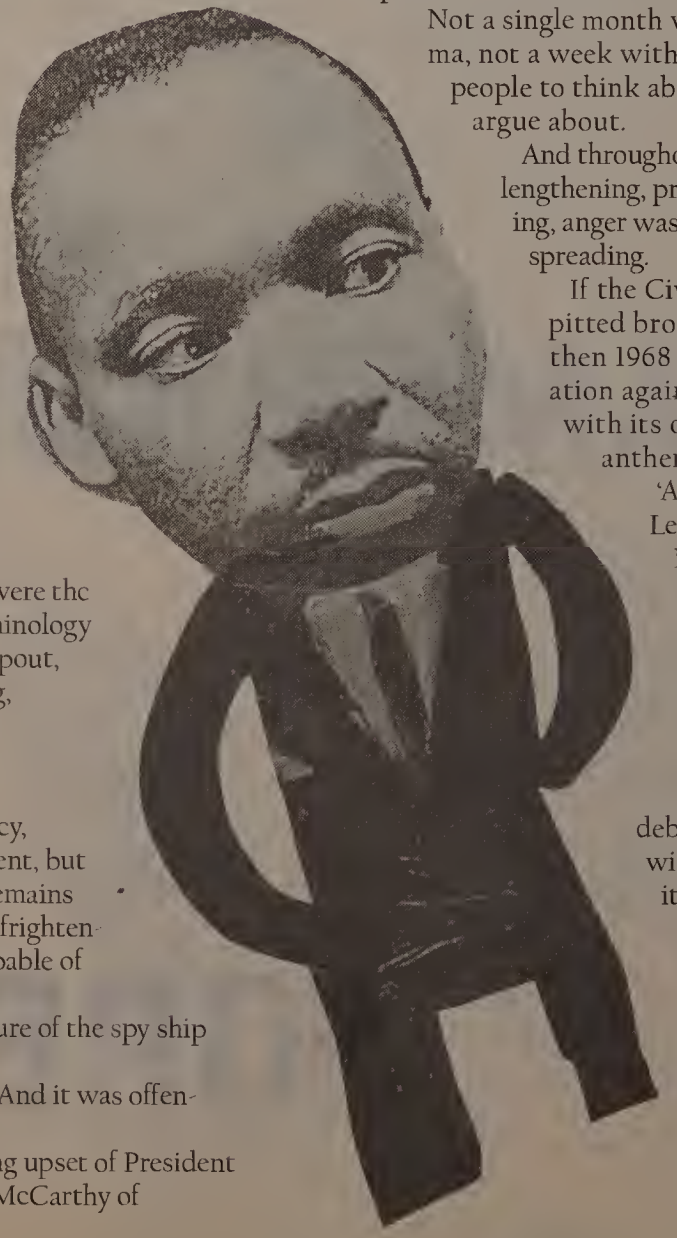
In 1969, no dictionary would be complete without all of the above.

Yet despite all this surface normalcy, 1968 turned out to be not only different, but epic. And as with all things epic, it remains puzzling, overwhelming, intriguing, frightening and, even these 30 years later, capable of provoking passion and pain.

January shocked us with the capture of the spy ship Pueblo by North Korea.

In February, the stunner was Tet. And it was offensive.

By early March, it was the stunning upset of President Lyndon Johnson by Senator Eugene McCarthy of Wisconsin in the New Hampshire presidential primary. By late March, it was the even more stunning decision by Johnson to remove himself as a possible candidate for re-election.



April brought the national trauma of the assassination and burial of the Reverend Martin Luther King Jr., while May saw the historic arrest and expulsion of more than 100 students for the attempted takeover of the office of the president of Columbia University.

In June, Bobby Kennedy was gunned down. In July, Muhammed Ali tried to have the Supreme Court overturn his conviction for draft evasion, splitting the country between those who hailed him as a hero or branded him a coward.

Next came the bloody month of August, when the streets of Chicago were filled with the broken bodies of antiwar protesters railing against the Vietnam War. September revealed a different sort of protester, one who chose to reject the candidates of both major parties in favor of the standard-bearer for the new American Party. They nodded in silent approval when their candidate for President, former Alabama Governor George Wallace, promised "if any leftwing protester ever lies down in front of my car when I'm President it will be the last car he ever lays down in front of."

In October the shocking images from the International Olympic Games of American track stars Tommie Smith and John Carlos accepting their Olympic medals with heads bowed and fists raised high in a black power salute, stunned Americans.

In November, Nixon finally did become "the one," while in December Americans gained some measure of emotional release by watching transfixed as the Apollo 8 capsule orbited around the moon.

Not a single month without major trauma, not a week without some event for people to think about, talk about or argue about.

And throughout it all, hair was lengthening, protests were increasing, anger was rising and fear was spreading.

If the Civil War allegedly pitted brother against brother, then 1968 seemed to pit generation against generation, each with its own bumper sticker anthem:

'America-Love It or Leave It' versus 'Sex, Drugs, Rock and Roll.'

Yet amid these better remembered events, there took place smaller, but equally powerful moments.

The musical Hair debuted on Broadway, with its on-stage nudity, its antiwar message and its declaration that we were about to enter the Age of Aquarius. My Fair Lady it wasn't, and the generation gap grew larger.

More than 220 major student demonstrations took place, including 97 protests by black students and the takeover of 59 college buildings.

Dr. Benjamin Spock was convicted in a Boston courtroom of counseling young men on how to violate the draft, while the Reverend Philip Berenger was sentenced in a Baltimore courtroom for spilling blood on Army records.

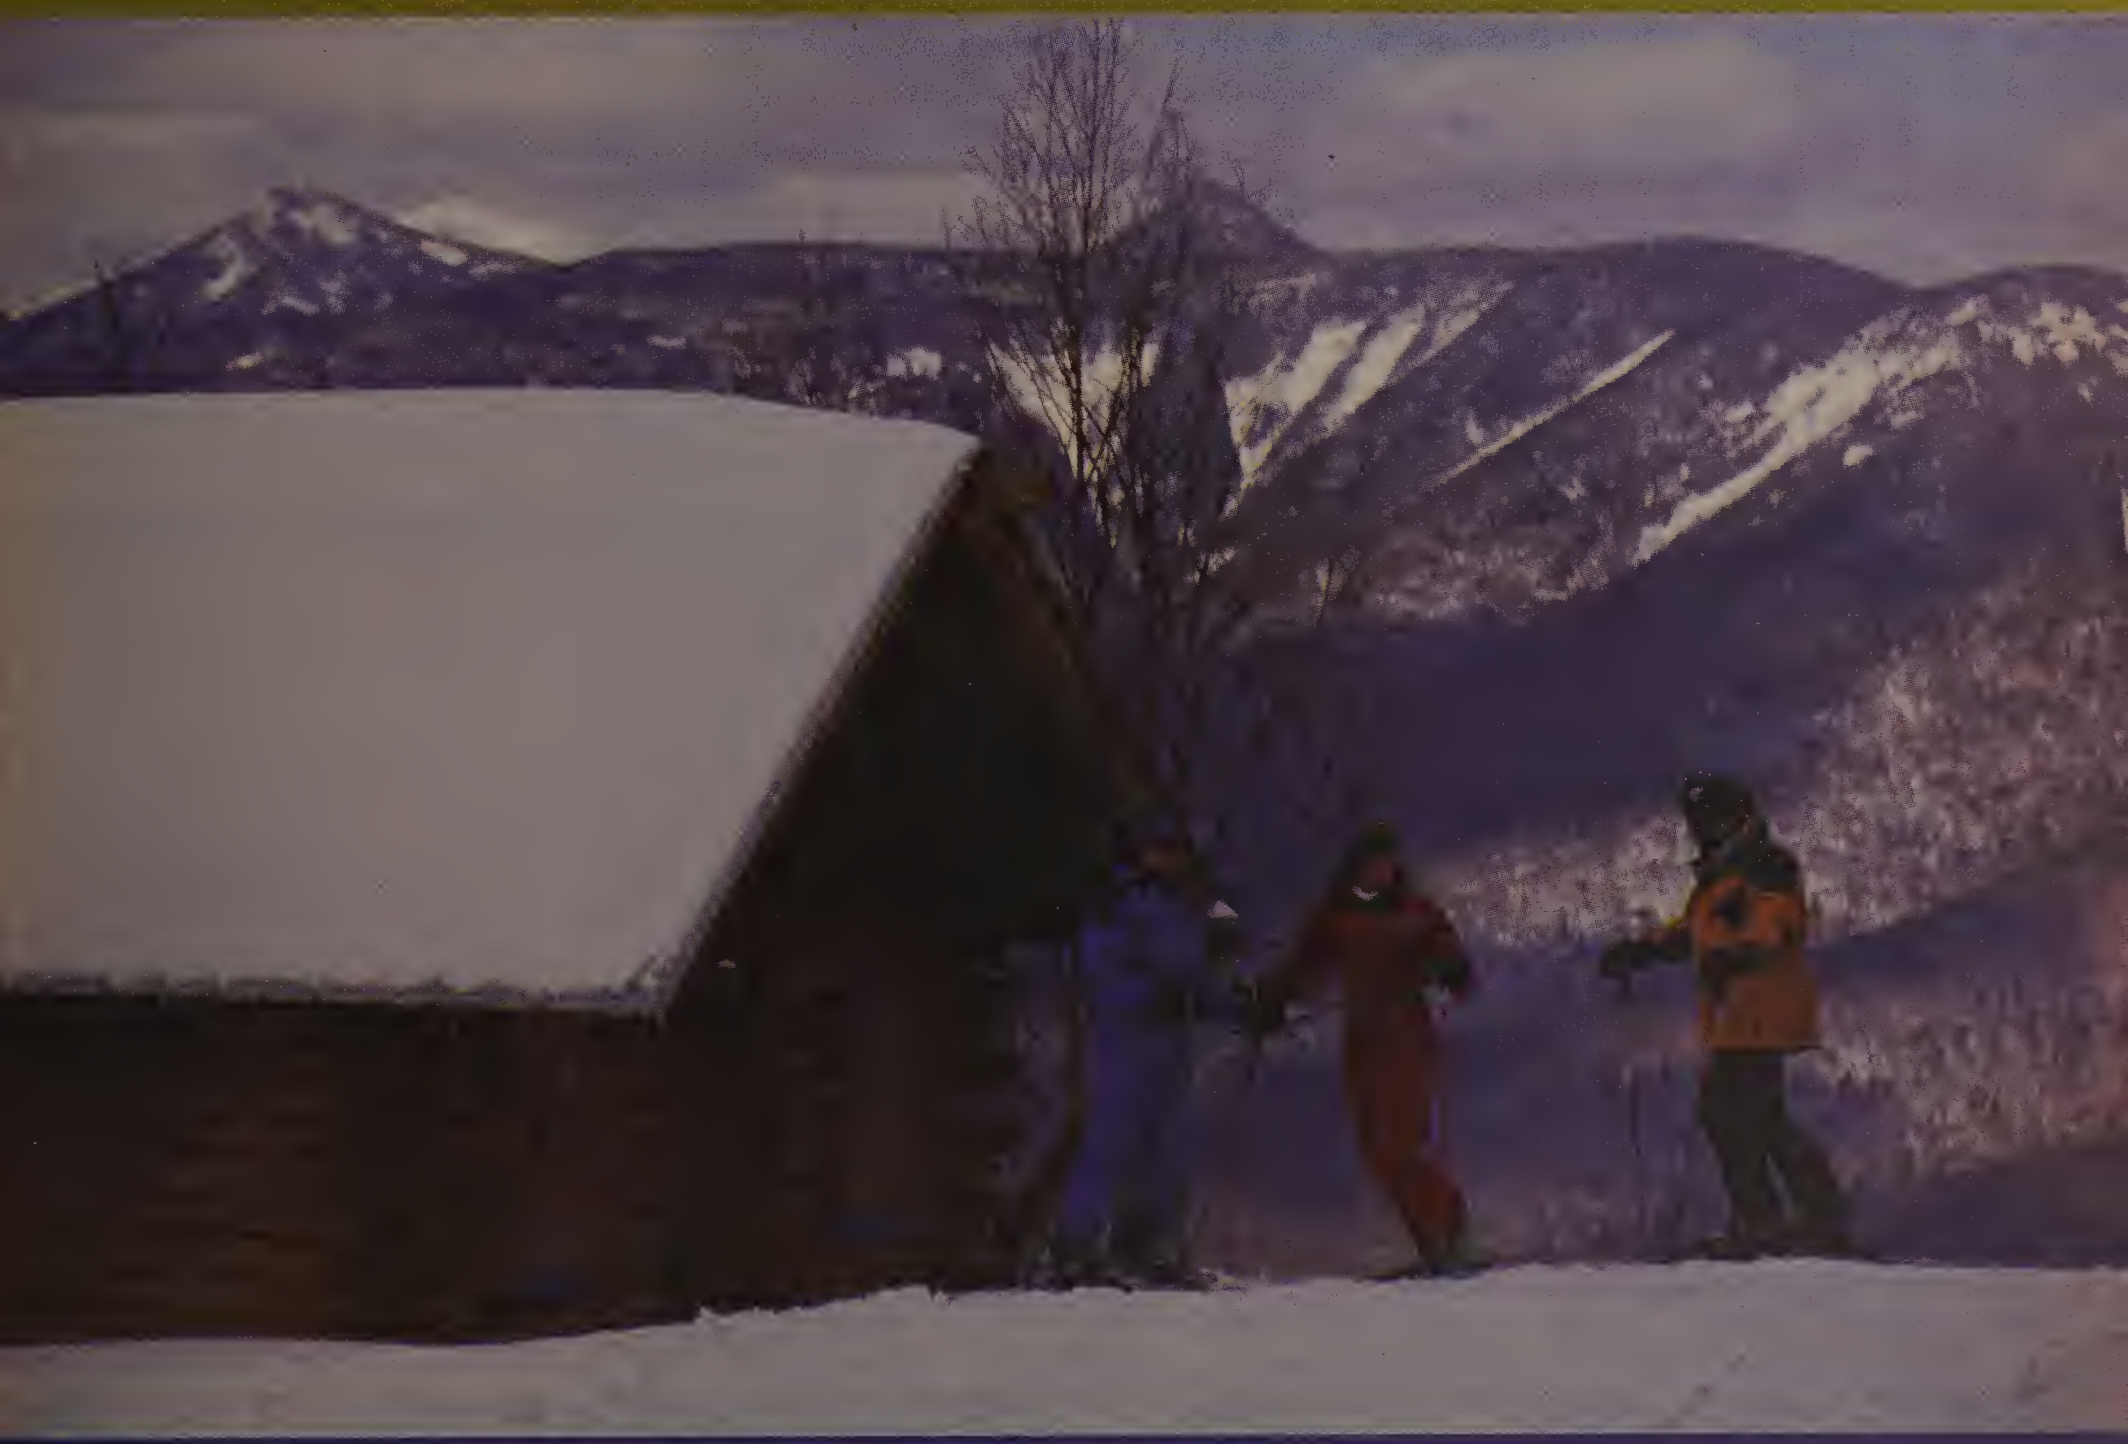
1968 found the Catholic Church issuing its controversial encyclical, 'Humanae Vitae', which condemned the use of any birth control measures, warning that such methods would lead to "infidelity, immorality and loss of respect for women."

Only 104 years after the Civil War ended, and a mere 48 years after women had earned the right to vote, Shirley Chisholm became the first elected "Negro" Congresswoman in the history of the US House of Representatives.

Rod McKuen, writer of unsingable songs and unspeakably rotten verse, raked in millions from the sale of his albums and poems. Meanwhile, singers Bobby Goldsboro and Jeanie C. Reilly rode the equally unfathomable lowbrow musical taste of America to success with their individual number one hits, "Honey" and "Harper Valley PTA".

And as if to signal to all that even great years contain elements that are better left forgotten, 1968 remains the year that a pathetic failure named Herbert Khaury (aka Larry Love) was transformed into a pathetic success (albeit briefly), called Tiny Tim.

But perhaps in the cruelest irony of all, December 31, 1968, did not bring the madness of the year to a full close. For it wasn't until late 1969 that the awful news of the March '68 massacre of hundreds of women and children by American soldiers at My Lai in Vietnam was made public.



A 1968 event traumatizing 1969. How appropriate.

In the end, exhausted and reshaped forever, our nation moved forward to confront the crises, conflicts and catastrophes of the next 30 years. But no single event, be it Watergate, the Nixon resignation, the Oil Crisis of 1979 or the Iran Contra Scandal, and certainly no single year, has come close to affecting America as did the events of 1968. ✦

Theater

BY DAVID ROSENBAUM

In the summer of 1993, when Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg's Miss Saigon first helicoptered into Boston, the production was famously controversial. It was, some critics said, just like Boublil's and Schonberg's bloated Les Miserables, only with choppers. Asian-American performers were angry because the two centerpiece roles, the Engineer and Kim, were played by an Englishman, Jonathan Pryce, and a Filipino, Lea Salonga. Other people were upset because the musical—which told the story of a Vietnamese girl seduced and abandoned by an American GI while it revisited the fall of Saigon and all its attendant unpleasantness—did not show the American war effort in the best light. And remember, too, that 1993 was the year of the Gulf War—a good war that we won as opposed to a bad war that we lost. Why would we want rain on our national victory parade?

But Miss Saigon became a hit, and now, revisiting the show five years later, one wonders why all the fuss? We've grown used to gigantism in our musical theater, and now even expect it. As for the war, Miss Saigon has very little to say about it, and even less to say about the two lovers it portrays caught in its toils. What this sentimental tragedy has instead of a message or insight is lots of schmaltz and spectacle.

Which is not, necessarily, a bad thing. The combined force of Alain Boublil's simplistic text (girl finds boy, girl loses boy, girl finds boy again but now he's married) and the seamless flow of Claude-Michel Schonberg's music—part rock, part gamelan, part operatic pop—eventually bring the audience to a state of exhausted, weepy submission. And who can resist a good cry?

But it's a long hard road getting there. Miss Saigon begins slowly. Very slowly. The curtain goes up on a cliche of a Saigon strip joint called Dreamland where our hero, Chris, meets a virginal country girl, Kim, forced into prostitution. As written, Chris (Steve Pasquale, who fell ill on opening night and was replaced by Brien Keith Fisher after intermission) is a blank: just another messed-up but fundamentally well-intentioned GI Joe. The innocent Kim (Elizabeth Paw) is just as predictably sweet and uninspiring. Their affair would be unbearably dull, and Act I simply unbearable, without the mediation of the play's best creation, Dreamland's owner, emcee and pimp, the Engineer, charismatically played here by Joseph Anthony Foronda. The Engineer is a funny, vulgar, vivid Sportin' Life-type character with long, greasy hair and a purple zoot-suit who supplies 90 percent of the show's energy and 99 percent of its smarts.

Soon after Chris vows to be true forever, he's gone, back stateside, and three years pass without warning. We suddenly find Kim taking care of his child, and warding off the advances of her cousin, a North Vietnamese commissar. (The North Vietnamese, presented with a splash of fascist glamour, carrying tall red flags and marching about under a 15 foot tall statue of Ho Chi Minh, supply Act I's first frisson.) Rescued by the Engineer, Act I ends with Kim and the Engineer becoming boat people, heading upstage with a crowd bound for Bangkok. It is one of the show's most powerful moments: silhouettes on a bare, smoky stage, their backs to the audience, trudging toward a doom-laden rendezvous with exile.

Miss Saigon's second half moves much more quickly, and, yes, early on, in a flashback, the show's famous helicopter really does descend from the rafters to pluck American soldiers off the roof of the embassy as North Vietnamese troops march victorious into Saigon. Indeed, most of the show's spectacle is crammed into Act II. Soon after the helicopter, there's a stripper-stuffed dance number in Bangkok that recalls the "Broadway Rhythm" sequence of Singing in the Rain, followed hard after that by the showstopping "American Dream," starring the Engineer and a chorus line (with choreography courtesy of A Chorus Line) composed of platinum-wigged Vietnamese strippers made up like Marilyn Monroes and a Cadillac with a neon USA 1 license plate zooming down from heaven. But even though the spectacle is what brings in the big bucks, Miss Saigon's most affecting, most dramatic moments are played out on a bare stage with plain, eloquent bamboo shades, rising and falling, as framing devices.

Elizabeth Paw as Kim and Steve Pasquale as Chris in a scene from Miss Saigon.

Art, Miss Saigon is not. Boublil's lyrics range from pedestrian to embarrassing, and Schonberg's music is utterly forgettable. (He is, after all, French, and the French cannot rock.) Whatever power the show has is borrowed from our memories of that miserable war, and from the archetypal potency of Kim's love for her son. That, plus Joseph Anthony Foronda's bravura performance, and Andrea Rivette's impressive singing as Chris's stateside wife, eventually do the trick, bringing a lump to the throat, a tear to the eye, and the feeling that despite all impediments, the theater has once again touched our hearts.

Music by Claude-Michel Schonberg. Lyrics by Richard Maltby Jr. and Alain Boublil. Adapted from the original French lyrics by Alain Boublil. Directed by Nicholas Hytner. Production designed by John Napier. Lighting by David Hersey. Presented by Cameron Mackintosh. Starring Joseph Anthony Foronda, Elizabeth Paw, Steve Pasquale, Raymond Patterson, David Kater, and Andrea Rivette. At the Wang Center through February 28.

RAW?

Yeah, we can do raw.

At Tatsukichi, we make Boston's most authentic sushi. (Sashimi, too.) So we know fish. Raw fish. Try it in one of our famous Tatami Rooms. You like it like that. Raw.

Light On the Toes, Not the Heart

What do you get when you mix sex, death and AIDS with a dollop of religion? Some may say blasphemy, but choreographer and dancer Tommy Neblett calls it "Ecstasies & Devotions," the dance/theater piece Prometheus Dance presents February 6-8 at the Mass College of Art. Inspired by the death of Neblett's first lover from AIDS, "Ecstasies & Devotions" is a moving piece that explores the controversial political, personal and spiritual issues of homosexual life in the '90s. Bring an open mind and heart to the Tower Auditorium, Mass College of Art, 621 Huntington Ave. Tickets $8-12, call 576-5336.

We Won't Be Left Out

While Boston may not be able to contribute glorious weather and glittering stars to the Academy Awards, what we do have, in abundance mind you, is ice. And we're loaning it to the fete-of-all fetes in the form of the Skaters' Tribute to Hollywood, which will be broadcast on ESPN prior to the star-studded spectacle. Occurring live on January 29 at 7 pm, the winter extravaganza combines the beauty of ice-performance with the magic of Hollywood as Olympic Champions Robin Cousins and Peggy Fleming, along with the World Champion Friends, skate to Academy award-winning songs. Call 787-2860 for tickets to the performance at Matthews Arena at Northeastern University. And you don't need to get a loaner from Harry Winston.

Blood By Any Name

Child sacrifice, molestation, psychosis, slayings, murder, revenge—why should the Greeks have all the fun? Sounds like fabulous fodder for a live show to me. And now it is. LiveStage Performance brings Elektrafire, a modern rock opera based on the Greek lore of Sophocles and the classic opera by Richard Strauss, to The Middle East February 2 & 3. The one-act opera, full of raging characterizations and explosive drama, follows a terrifying chain of anger as Elektra and her sister Chrysothemis fight to escape the House of Atreus and their brutal mother Queen Klytemnestra. Elektrafire is performed twice each night, at 8:30 & 10:30 pm, with a different guest artist each night (Ted Condo of 6L6 on Monday and Rick Berlin and His Piano on Tuesday). The perfect foil for impending St. V Day, the 90 minute show is at The Middle East Cafe Upstairs, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 354-5434.

Hope They Didn't Quit Their Day Jobs

What could be more twistedly entertaining than watching your stoic boss, the "numbers guy," flail miserably on the rope course of the company outing? Well, how 'bout local business leaders and celebrities performing on stage at a special performance of the Huntington Theatre Company's The Shaughraun. "Chairmen on the Boards" features the likes of Chad Gifford, chief executive officer of BankBoston, and John Hamill, president of Fleet Bank, on stage to benefit the Huntington's education and outreach programs. Don't miss the business-leaders-slash-actors on February 3 at 7 pm (with a pre-show reception at Symphony Hall and a party with the "cast" after the performance), tickets $50-150, call 266-0800. By the way, a Shaughraun is a bolsterous rogue who mocks the customs of his people—an explanation for ATM fees, perhaps?

Just Like That Annoying Guy in The Next Cubicle

"Penn & Teller have been doing magic for 23 years and are so sick of it we could spit. So in the new show, we are moving into the field of religion and will be performing real miracles," says Penn & Teller, lying through their teeth. The rip-off artists are bringing their brand-spanking new show to the Shubert Theatre for a two week engagement, February 3-15. Goofs and guffaws abound, including card tricks with forklifts, broken bottle juggling, the fabled bullet catch trick and bunny rabbits in chipper-shredders. Catch them before the ASPCA does at 265 Tremont St. Tickets are $22.50-49.50, call (800) 447-7400.

Like a Fish Needs a Bicycle

Brahmin, shmamin. Forget the missionary position, Boston men are lining up four-score strong for Boston Women on Top. No, keep your patrician propriety about you, this is not a Dr. Ruth sponsored movement, but the second annual theater festival sponsored by Centastage and Underground Railway Theater. From January 29 through February 22, Boston Women on Top features a line-up of one-woman theater spectacles including modern-day tragedies and late night comedies. The festival's climax (sorry, I couldn't help myself) is the February 7 last Boston performance of Washed-Up Middle-Aged Women—a menopausal celebration of middle-age. Put aside your puritanical pooh-poohs and go to the Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St. Single tickets $10.50-16, festival passes $35, call 423-0320.

BY BETSY SHERMAN

★ Don't Bother
★★ Fair
★★★ Good

Fallen ★1/2
A would-be Seven that doesn't even make it to a two. This supernatural thriller does a superficial dance with religious iconography. A serial killer is possessed by a "fallen angel" who, upon the man's execution, passes into a succession of other hosts, in order to torment police detective Denzel Washington. You'd think such a powerful, versatile demon would have more important things to do. Scenes where the demon passes into strangers through touch have a stylized charge and some metaphoric power. In between, the pacing is narcoleptic. Subtract points for the boneheaded voice-over. The film may have been more entertaining had the cop gone off the deep end; Denzel remains on a relatively even keel. Rent Prophecy instead.

Kundun ★★★★
Martin Scorsese's film about the early years of the Dalai Lama—from his discovery by Buddhist monks in 1937 to his community's exodus from Tibet in 1959—is a film of great tenderness, sadness and strength. There's a magnificent clarity in Melissa Mathison's biographical screenplay, and Scorsese directs a cast of Tibetans who communicate the grave and joyful sense of purpose of carrying on Buddhist tradition through a boy who is believed to be the reincarnation of a holy leader. The filmmaking elements (production design, costume design and artful cinematography) that went into recreating a monastic life that has been largely destroyed by communist Chinese attacks are impeccable, but not the movie's raison d'être. Scorsese makes this a film about faith and responsibility; it's a quieter complement to his Last Temptation of Christ. The only weak point in Kundun is that Philip Glass's score retreads his previous movie scores. This is a film that is both mesmerizing and keenly intelligent.

Oscar and Lucinda ★★ 1/2
Surprisingly mild for a non-Hollywood outing by Australian director Gillian Armstrong (Little Women) and writer Laura Jones, who collaborated on the amazing High Tide. The title characters are 19th century square pegs who seem destined to fall in love. Oscar is born in England to a strict Calvinist preacher father; he transgresses by siding with the open-minded Anglicans. Studying for the ministry in Oxford, he finds he has a talent and passion for gambling. Meanwhile, in Australia, heiress Lucinda takes over a glass factory; her gambling jones matches Oscar's. They meet on an ocean voyage. Comically repressed emotion leads to a grand folly, the transporting of a glass church to a remote Australian mission. Marvelous performances by Cate Blanchett as the fiercely independent Lucinda and a hilarious Ralph Fiennes as a guilt-ridden but wildly cheerful Oscar—but the movie is hobbled by a cutesy tone.

Oscar and Lucinda's Ralph Fiennes and Cate Blanchett.

The Sweet Hereafter ★★★ 1/2
In a year that seems to have contained more movies than usual involving the death of children, Atom Egoyan's adaptation of Russell Banks's novel confronts that issue head-on. The resulting film is devastating and rewarding. A lawyer (Ian Holm) travels to a remote Canadian village in which nearly all the children have been killed in a school bus accident. His efforts to unite parents in a lawsuit ends up exacerbating rifts; the townspeoples's unsavory secrets are revealed amidst their grief.

Wag the Dog ★★★ 1/2
That this social satire is three-quarters brilliant is certainly enough to recommend it—although it does stumble badly at an important plot point in the home stretch. It's an inspired collaboration by director Barry Levinson, writers David Mamet and Hilary Henkin, and an ultra-sharp cast. A potential presidential scandal on the eve of the election necessitates the overtime work of White House spin doctors; they team up with a Hollywood producer to create the illusion that US forces have heroically invaded Albania. It's a scary and accurate view of what the media and the masses will swallow, as long as it's packaged pretty. Robert De Niro excels as a type he's never played before, a verbally dexterous, bow-tied egghead. His poker-faced performance in tandem with Dustin Hoffman's swaddled-in-showbiz Hollywood pro makes for classic tag-team comedy. There was no need, though, to make Anne Heche's presidential aide so ditzy.

Welcome to Sarajevo ★★★★
Michael Winterbottom's powerful film set in 1992 Sarajevo, a city under siege, is a refreshing departure from standard war-reporter yarn. Its kinetic style, mixing archival footage with a fictional story, isn't unique, but is particularly adroit. Its emphasis on what unites Sarajevo, even in wartime, with other cosmopolitan capitals rather what divides it from them is provocative. And its portrait of a protagonist who takes human-scale steps toward an act of heroism avoids the pulp cliché of the larger-than-life scribe. The casting of talented stage actor Stephen Dillane as the corespondent who adopts an orphan girl and brings her to safety in England adds enormously to the credibility of the piece. Woody Harrelson co-stars effectively as a hotshot American TV reporter who is more concerned about Bosnia than he seems; Kerry Fox, Marisa Tomei and Emily Lloyd are also fine in supporting roles.

Tastings

BY GRETCHEN VOSS

Eastie

Tantalizing tastes from 25 East Boston restaurants are all the rage at A Taste of Eastie. Enjoy seafood, Italian, Latin American, Chinese and more at the Harborside Hyatt on January 29 from 6-9 pm. A mere $25 includes fabulous food, free parking (no kidding!) and entertainment. Advance purchase recommended, call 561-1044. Proceeds benefit East Boston Main Streets.

Champagne and Caviar

Kicking off 1998 with style, Plaza III • The Kansas City Steakhouse in the heart of Faneuil Hall introduces a Champagne, Oyster & American Caviar Bar. A selection of moderately-priced American "methode champenoise" sparkling wines and "grand marque" French champagnes by-the-glass will be served, accompanied by an appealing array of appetizers from across North America, including freshly shucked oysters on the half-shell, sturgeon caviar, golden caviar, oysters Rockefeller and Nova Scotia smoked salmon.

Kids

Start the kiddies off on a pretentious foot and introduce them to Traditional Tea at The Ritz-Carlton. The Ritz is pairing up with Madeline (guests are welcome to bring their own Madeline dolls) to host a very French yet very traditional tea featuring "junior-size" buffet tables overflowing with peanut butter and jelly pinwheels, grilled cheese triangles, sesame chicken fingers, mini fruit tarts and dipped strawberries—all accompanied by hot cider, hot chocolate, milk and fruit punch. Adults will enjoy a more traditional tea with an assortment of tea sandwiches, scones, Devonshire Cream and a selection of tea. The tea takes place at The Grand Ballroom from 2-4 pm. The price of $25 for children and $35 for adults certainly beats four years at a finishing school.

Tea and Tunes

Afternoon tea at the Bristol Lounge of the Four Seasons Hotel will get a little livelier this month with the addition of the Harvard Krokodiles. Slug back tea (blow first) to the tunes of Harvard University's oldest a cappella singing group the first Saturday of every month from January through May and September through December from 3:30-4 pm. Is there a (tea) theme here?

Wine Seminars

Also featured at Plaza III beginning this month is the Monday Evening Series of Wine Seminars & Events. Master Sommelier Harold Toussaint brings his mobile wine academy to the American Royal Room at 6 pm to enchant guests with his vast vino knowledge. Guests will taste his selections, accompanied by cheese and fruits. February 9 features California Pinot Noir for $45 per person.

Recipe Festival

Boston Park Plaza Hotel has whipped up a dozen zesty weekends featuring international cooking demonstrations by famous Boston chefs for The Great Recipe Festival. Chefs and celebrities will share secrets and stories and feed patrons their specialties through March 29. The near future will entertain Stan Frankenthaler of Red Herring and Salamander on January 31 and Leo Romero of Casa Romero on February 7.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Euro

Forget Seth Greenberg's haunts for the hottest Euro scene—hit Turner Fisheries at the Westin Copley Place Boston instead with its EuroCuisine '98. Starting January 22, Chef David Filippetti takes you on a culinary excursion spiced with European Michelin guest chef visits, cookbook signings and wine tastings. Menu specials will be paired with wines from Laboure-Roi and Chateau Lynch. Don't miss the Pan Seared Scallops Pancetta, and don't forget to stick your pinkie out ever so delicately while sipping your wine.

Chocoholics

Add to your waistline for a great cause. All winter Grill 23 on Berkeley Street serves a Chocolate Sampler Plate, consisting of several unique chocolate desserts created by pastry chef Judy Mattera, to benefit Share Our Strength. Two chocoholics can feast fabulously on the $20 house-made truffles, mousse, custard, cookies and cakes, with $5 to charity.

BY ROCKIE GARDINER JANUARY 28 FEBRUARY 10, 1998

GENERAL FORECAST

If you know your ascendant, read it too.

ARIES
(MARCH 20-APRIL 20)

Casual friends and money can be a lethal mix. Neither a lender nor a borrower be, at least not while your risk-taking Mars ruler is challenging powerful Pluto in your eighth house of sex, death and joint financial concerns. I'd put off any tax or insurance matters—a gun purchase, too. On the other hand, a somewhat secretive sexual encounter with a stranger is a distinct, albeit dangerous, possibility that you'll be sorely tempted to check out. Compulsions, obsessions and the dark side this week, my pet.

TAURUS
(APRIL 20-MAY 20)

You might feel the effect earlier than next Thursday's due date, but as Venus prepares to change direction, you could become disoriented, a victim of your ruling planet's "wobble." Don't fight the feeling or decide to tough it out. You're more liable to misread signals while Mercury and nebulous Neptune are joined together. Actually, you should double-check all e-mail messages and long distance phone calls since communications are so iffy that you're not sure what to believe or, for that matter, whom. Lyrics and pix, however, should come easy.

GEMINI
(MAY 21-JUNE 20)

Your Mercury ruler is only going to be in techno-friendly Aquarius for three weeks, so if you intend to buy electronic equipment, computer programs or an astrological textbook, do it soon. It'll be easier to understand exactly what you're getting into while your brain is keyed to the future. However, and there always seems to be a however, don't make your purchase early in the work week. That's because Mercury will be inundated with vague Neptunian impressions, the ones that cloud men's minds. Imaginative results, but not the kind that'll survive a double-blind test.

CANCER
(JUNE 21-JULY 22)

Crabs born in late June, early July may be caught in a tangled web. Someone's psychosexual machinations can become obvious when Mars (in your house of sex and death) squares Pluto in your house of romance and creativity. There is a S&M feel to this aspect, also an indication that guns are involved. Be careful. The fact that Venus, in your house of partners, is changing direction can also affect what was once called common sense. There's little chance that faculty will be used; Mercury merging with impressionable Neptune tosses logic to the wind.

LEO
(JULY 23-AUGUST 23)

Double-check results from health procedures you give or take this week as well as reports at work. While Mercury (the read-out) and Neptune (the medicine, the mysticism) are conjunct, all sorts of misunderstandings may occur. Nobody sees or hears the same thing, however everyone is willing to sacrifice something. Don't let it be something you cherish. Midweek, a reward for patience and consistency—plus a change in the direction a relationship was heading—as your sun ruler is favored by Saturn.

VIRGO
(AUGUST 23 SEPTEMBER 22)

August-born Virgos might suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune when militant Mars, in your Pisces house of partners, squares Pluto in your home base. This is a sneaky attack that may entangle you in a scheme that is not of your own devise. An air of make-believe colors almost everything everybody else is doing; that's because your Mercury ruler is either submerged in the murky waters of Neptunian deceit or elevated to the heights of inspirational sermons and sacred songs. Get help.

LIBRA
(SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 23)

Surely you've been held up by a child or a lover before, but I doubt if their tactics were as terroristic. Anyway, that's what can happen when Pluto in your money house is squared by aggressive Mars. Maybe the aspect will manifest as an (expensive) art project with sex and violence as the most obvious ingredients. Since your Venus ruler is turning direct, you can't be sure what you feel or who you can trust, and the mental miasma caused by the Mercury-Neptune coupling will be of no help. Let the moment pass, if possible.

SCORPIO
(OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Every now and then, you find yourself in a situation where you are damned if you do and damned if you don't. That's because Mars and Pluto, your two ruling planets, are locked in a square aspect, pitting one of your interests against another (equally strong) one. This semi-annual astrological exercise in extricating yourself from cross-purposes is wasted on other signs, since no one learns from experience (past lives, included) as well—as thoroughly—as a Scorpio. The square is exact Tuesday night, but I'd start looking over my shoulder as early as Sunday.

SAGITTARIUS
(NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21)

Every 12 years or so you go through this phase we call Jupiter in Pisces, when you have to change your routine, no matter how successful it's been, and go off in search of something kinda spiritual, quasi-arty. A sojourn in Bali learning how to batik or a pilgrimage to Poona are typical reactions to your ruling planet's shift into watery "maybe I should go on a cruise" Pisces. Centaurs who are stuck in one place can wind up taking photography classes or frequenting a room in the library they haven't been in before. Interesting and enlightening.

CAPRICORN
(DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

Everybody is a little on edge, reacting either to the macho stance caused by the nasty Mars-Pluto square or else from Venus's impending switch from retrograde to direct next Thursday. While the former can cost money (Mars is in your house of assets), the latter (Venus is in your sign) emphasizes how you feel and how you look. A close relationship could be tested because you're so confident—so full of yourself right now—but past experience and family values (the sun supports your Saturn ruler) will bring you back to your level-headed senses.

AQUARIUS
(JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Happy birthday. Among everything else going on, you have to fit in a celebration of yourself and what you've accomplished since this time last year. Congratulations are in order as are thanks for having expansive Jupiter in your sign (until February 4). There's more growth to come as Neptune's entrance into Aquarius activates a psychic channel to the center of the cosmos, the heart of the galaxy, ya-da, ya-da. While you may be spun around by waves of intuition on Monday, by next Wednesday they'll be put to a practical use.

PISCES
(FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

February Fish could find themselves in a devious power struggle as Mars in Pisces urges you to taunt or outright attack the dark force (the IRS, the DEA?) masquerading as Pluto in your Sagittarius midheaven. The last time this square appeared was President's Day weekend in 1996, so you tell me what happened. Everybody gets smarter, more literate while Mercury in early Aquarius is merging with your Neptune Ruler on Monday. That's when you pull in needed information and the people who'll help you achieve what you've been hoping for.

'98 Will Pia Better Year

I ceased being a reader of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN as soon as Pia disappeared from your pages. Eventually, though, Rick Pitino's photo (December 17 issue) lured me into reluctantly picking up the mid-December issue—and to my joy I see that she is back! I enjoy most of your writers, but Pia is definitely the reason I pick up and read your magazine. Congrats on getting her back.

CATHERINE COLEMAN

O Ye of Deep Pockets

Paul Solman's story about Emmanuel Music (January 14 issue) is a great PR piece that should fill the pews of this great little church under the eyes of the Ritz. There is no doubt that Emmanuel Music is a wonderful jewel that anyone can see for free starting at 11 am on Sundays after the offertory and collection. People come from all over the suburbs to worship as well as listen to the fabulous music. Others of less interest in faith wander in from the Ritz and Back Bay to honor Bach.

It is only rigid religious conviction of the church that believes that services celebrating a faith should not charge money. It is a foolish, old conviction that everyone is welcome in the church that inhibits Emmanuel Church from charging for the best Bach in Boston and therefore raising enough money to fix leaking roofs, old organs and cracked windows. Being pragmatic, most Jewish synagogues charge for seats to High Holy Day services. Perhaps it is time that the liberal Episcopal Emmanuel Church should be as realistic and charge for anyone missing the service and sitting for Bach. Where else could you hear Craig Smith, Seiji Ozawa or John Harbison lead the best opera singers and the best musicians in the Northeast week after week in a repertory that celebrates God with near perfection?

If you come to Emmanuel after Bill Wallace, the Southern preacher whose sermons sound like stories by a poet, gives his sermons, I suggest you pay at least $10 per person for the best concert series in Boston. Only then will the church be fixed to look as good as Jordan Hall, and continue to sound as rich as Symphony Hall, to the glory of Boston as well as, incidentally, God.

Yeah, Real Hippies Never Asked for Names

Regarding Michael Goldman's essay in the January 28 issue on why 1968 should be the Year of the Century, citing this song as an example of the year's dysfunctionality..."Hello, I Love You, Won't You Tell Me Your Name" seems to me the very essence of simple, innocent joy in life. And the very opposite of convoluted, dysfunctional decadence.

Mange!

I have lived in Boston my entire life and haven't spent much time in the North End. Now, thanks to Nini Diana and her "Insider's Guide to the North End" in the January 28 issue, I will venture over there more often. I can't wait to head to Italy for an evening. Thanks to Diana for an informative guide and history of this charming European neighborhood that is right in my backyard. (However, she neglected to mention what my boss tells me is the best restaurant in the North End: Florence's.)

David:

As we are about to embark upon the long and costly road of corporate litigation to settle your trademark dispute over The Improper Bostonian Magazine's annual Boston's Best issue, I challenge you to accept an alternative path of resolution.

We have absolutely no intention of discontinuing our annual Boston's Best issue. We believe the premise absurd that a Massachusetts court will "Enter a permanent injunction restraining us from publishing our Boston's Best issue or any derivation thereof" and "Award Boston Magazine $250,000" because of alleged "trademark infringement," despite the urgings of your major law firm and the "Consumer Confusion Consultant" your lawsuit refers to.

Your lawsuit seeks to prevent The Improper Bostonian Magazine from showcasing individuals and establishments that represent what is best in our home city. This is an outrageous and untenable proposition. Its intended outcome is anti-competitive and a violation of the First Amendment.

Before we both launch into a legal process where the most likely outcome is enriching the bank accounts of attorneys, let's take a positive step together and prove that our magazines are capable of placing the community first. Let's settle our dispute in a constructive manner.

Therefore, I formally challenge you (in all seriousness) to a duel, mano a mano, one month from today to settle this dispute through the one and only sport that defines all true Bostonians: Parallel Parking.

My proposal is simple: We hold a one-on-one competition officiated by mutually agreed upon judges. The losing publisher donates $10,000 to the winning publisher's favorite charity.

It would be further agreed that:

- You'll drop your lawsuit.
- We'll drop our countersuit.
- We'll confirm the validity of your Best of Boston mark and agree not to use the phrase in connection with our awards or in any other descriptive manner..
- You'll confirm the validity of our Boston's Best mark and agree not to use the phrase in connection with your awards or in any other descriptive manner.

I will also pledge, should I emerge the winner, to donate your $10,000 to the Mayor's City of Boston Scholarship Fund to help underprivileged children. Seems like a better alternative than paying legal fees to needy lawyers, doesn't it?

Sincerely,

Mark Semonian

Who owns this chair?

UNSEATED

As if by an unseen hand, the furniture store Palazzetti overnight became The Morson Collection last week, except Mr. Morson seemed to be selling a "collection" of the exact same Eurochic merchandise that was offered under the Palazzetti label the previous day. Which sent Mr. Palazzetti into a frenzy.

Reached at his New York office, Sergio Palazzetti said Greg Morson, who'd held the franchise for the pricey Park Square store, had "defaulted," leading Palazzetti to pull the franchise license, resulting in the abrupt name change. Palazzetti spewed that Morson had no right to continue to sell the furniture. Morson, said to be opening another store in Chicago, couldn't be reached, but sources here said they believed he owned both the store and its contents, even though it was no longer a franchise. Palazzetti also said he was suing Morson.

"Yeah, it's a young hothead versus an old hardhead," said a knowing Boston retailer.

A LA RECHERCHE DU TEMPS PERDU

State House veterans and aging goo-goos will remember Peter Goldmark, 57, the commonwealth's first Secretary of Human Services (appointed in 1972 by Gov. Frank Sargent), who was just named chairman and chief executive of the International Herald Tribune, based in Paris. Goldmark, well known in politics and journalism, left Boston to head the New York Port Authority, then the Times Mirror newspapers and, for the past 10 years, the Rockefeller Foundation. He's best recalled in Boston as the proponent of increased prison furloughs and deinstitutionalization of the mentally ill. Oh well, we were all young once.

BUT WHO'S THE RICHER FOOL?

Sumner Redstone, Viacom chief, Newton native and the Bay State's, to say nothing of one of the world's, richest residents, is getting taken to the woodshed by some financial analysts and press for what the New York Observer recently called his "self-delusion" about the value of his Simon & Schuster subsidiary. Suggesting Redstone wants to unload an operation he egregiously overpaid for, the Observer, with typical restraint, posits "what Mr. Redstone really seems to be hoping for is the appearance on his doorstep of that legendary Wall Street figure: the Greater Fool."

THE EMPEROR'S NEW EXHIBIT

Depending on whom you talk to, Cambridge artist Paul Richard (the "ch" is pronounced "sh") is either a visionary genius or a shameless self-promoter. Personally, we think he's a bit of both.

His last highly conceptual exhibit had people paying to watch him, through a small window, sitting in an otherwise empty room, eating lunch. Now comes "Paul Richard—Recent Works," which will be on display at the Weston Gallery on Kingston Street from February 13-23. The show will exhibit nothing. The walls will be bare. There will, however, be a gift shop in a small room next to the gallery, selling souvenir t-shirts and postcards.

"It's the essence of a blockbuster art show: promotion and tote bags," says Richard.

Unfortunately, he has a point.

Richard

BUT WILL THEY HAVE CHUG-A-LUG CONTESTS, KEG STANDS AND MUDSLIDE WARS?

Boston College opened a downtown alumni club this weekend, replete with a private dining room and bar, at the site of the now defunct Federal Club at 100 Federal St. Within an estimated 20,000 alumni in the Greater Boston area, 5,000 of whom work in the financial district, the club already has attracted about 1,400 members, say organizers, and eyes lots more.

This will be the Eagles' second attempt to establish an alumni nesting spot. An earlier roosting failed in the early '70s. "It wasn't successful because we made the classic mistake of getting in the restaurant business, which we shouldn't have, and back then we didn't have the number of grads that we do now," says mega-alum and club organizer, Jack Joyce, an executive with Alex. Brown in Boston. Proceeds from the club go to scholarships and special projects, says Joyce. One-time initiation fees start at $600 ($300 for Eaglets under 35) with monthly dues of $69. Lifetime memberships are $7,200.

AND NOW, AT A THEATER EVEN NEARER YOU

Check out the Actors Playhouse production of The Night of the Iguana, February 20-21, 268-2677. It stars our very own production director, Jeff Gill, in his very own rendition of the Richard Burton role.

WILL NATALIE GO NAKED?

Fred Rogers, the Newbury Street clothier that's been in business in and around Boston for 79 years, will close its sole remaining store next month because the 72-year-old current proprietor wants to retire. The Rogers emporium in Salem provided the on-air wardrobe (in return for an on-air credit line) for TV anchor Natalie Jacobson for what seemed like forever.

Jacobson

WHO'S CHEWING ON THE FAT?

Apparently not Bay Staters. Personal bankruptcy filings hit a record high in Massachusetts in 1997, points out the Boston Business Journal, with more than 21,000 cases. This, while the state's economy boasts one of the lowest jobless rates in years and businesses declaring Chapter 11 are on the decline.

Branagh

COMING SOON, TO A THEATER NEAR YOU

You may recall Shakespeare's Sister, the movie starring Kenneth Branagh, William Hurt and Madeline Stowe, the filming of which snarled traffic on Newbury Street and had the denizens of Back Bay completely starstruck a year and a half ago. Since then, no one's heard much about the production, but fears that it was dead on the vine are unfounded. Renamed The Proposition, it will be released at the end of March by Polygram Pictures, and previews should start popping up in movie theaters any day now.

Beautiful Junk

Upper middle-class trash dies beautifully, and in some cases lives on as very respectable stuff in your apartment. But you must have a Wellesley connection.

THIS ATTRACTIVE SPOT COULD BE THE REASON YOU move to Wellesley. Either buy a house in the town or find friends thus plushly located and go with them—otherwise, you're not welcome. The place in question is the dump—or more properly, the recycling center—and it's a veritable boutique without a roof. Here is suburban rectitude made of symmetrical discarding and orderly rot. The Christmas trees, for instance, look like an obediently neat, horizontal version of their for-sale selves. Sport utility vehicles drive around an estate-style mega-driveway contributing at one point to a gorgeous burgeoning mountain of leaves and grass, then on to stop-offs for cans that look positively decorative en masse. No sloppy castoffs here—corrugated, cardboard and bound boxes, newspapers and bags each have their allotted wonderland of goodbye. A Goodwill box takes acceptable clothing. Most amazing is the furniture and baby furniture, sternly required to be in good working order. Under rather monitored browsing, you may help yourself: Wellesley's loss is Somerville's happy gain. And the last station of the recycling cross is a virtual outdoor bookstore of give-or-take, with delineated shelves for fiction, mystery, biography, etc., all marked with printed signs and located under a protective canopy.

The Playplace For Your Workplace

The Urban Outing Club for business calls its events "hilarious schemes for building teams." Located in Brookline, 247-1996.

WITHIN A SWEET DESSERT OF FUN AND INVENTIVENESS, the events put on by the Urban Outing Club for business have a motive that is not so much ulterior as it is metaphorical. How, for instance, can a group of executives brought together to slurp Jello like a pack of crazy frat boys during initiation take the learnings and findings of this playful adventure and apply them, later on and somehow, to situations on the job? The wacky happenings—people piling into an ambulance, one of the temporary-fruitcakes proposing to a stranger on a downtown street with a lei around his neck, the gang building a nine hole golf course using a design inherited from another team (which may prove to involve hulahoops)—actually require elements of teamwork, ingenuity, negotiation, persuasion and diplomacy. Some of this method-ish madness, called "experiential learning," entails the reflective afterglow of organized debriefing with an actual facilitator, but some, like candy containing invisible vitamins,"teaches" team-building without spelling it out. Either way, it helps groups push the envelope while squeezing out a few clowns.

Sleep The Sleep Of The Asian

This small, versatile pillow filled with buckwheat hulls affords miniaturized comfort for sleeping, typing, driving, reading and doing yoga. At Walgreen's, $20.

WHEN YOU LIE ON THIS SOBAKAWA PILLOW, WHEN you adjust its myriad tiny, delicately-chattering buckwheat hulls to accommodate some very specific part of your body needing succor, you are relieved to be away from thuggish foam. Even friendly down does not differentiate its shape to your shape with half the particularity.

A favorite pillow in the Orient for hundreds of years, the 100 percent buckwheat hulls are the successor to pillows made with small pebbles or beans, and before that, pillows made of porcelain.

The Sobakawa pillow aids in keeping the head cool, upstream from the warm feet that, in conjunction, promote sleep, though this is not its obvious benefit. More Occidentally, it gives you the chance to tuck it under your upper arm and shoulder, should you have shoulder pain, or you can put it under your knees to relieve lumbar pain. Cooled in the freezer, it is used to fight a headache. Always, its slithery, fine-grained adaptability invites you to scrunch it up under your neck for reading in bed. Or jam this servant of a million little crunchies behind your typing or your driving back. Yoga stretchers use it under the upper back, and posture-seekers lie on it to stretch out the middle back.

Buckwheat hulls differentiate to your shape.

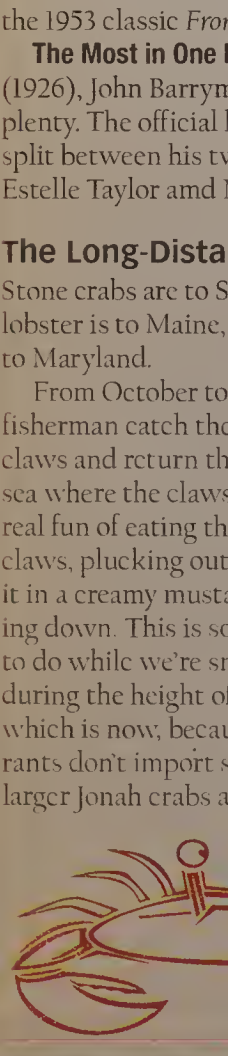
"Have your kiss and eat it too"

proclaim The Body Shop folks, in a rather tortured turn of phrase, touting their Kiss & Tell moisturizing lip balm, specially packaged for Valentine's Day in kiwi, mandarin and strawberry flavors ($12.95). And while they're at it, the same folks, continuing on the kiss theme, inform us that the following kisses have gone down in Hollywood history:

The Longest Kiss: In the 1941 flag-waving favorite, You're in the Army Now, Jane Wyman and Regis Toomey locked lips for a record three minutes and five seconds.



The Wettest Kiss: Deborah Kerr and Burt Lancaster smooch in the surf in the 1953 classic From Here to Eternity.

The Most in One Movie: In Don Juan (1926), John Barrymore puckered up plenty. The official kiss count is 127 split between his two leading ladies, Estelle Taylor amd Mary Astor.

The Long-Distance Crab

Stone crabs are to South Florida what lobster is to Maine, what crabcakes are to Maryland.

From October to May only (by law), fisherman catch the crabs, pull off the claws and return the crustaceans to the sea where the claws regenerate. The real fun of eating them is cracking the claws, plucking out the meat, dipping it in a creamy mustard sauce and chowing down. This is somethat that's hard to do while we're snowed or slushed in during the height of the crab season, which is now, because Boston restaurants don't import stone crabs. The larger Jonah crabs are the favorite son here. Restauratcurs say they prefer to serve fresh crab, meaning those from local waters, even though many privately admit the taste of stone crab, even frozen, is decidedly superior.

Devotees of the subtropical delicacy (and there are many) order shipments direct from the world-famous Joe's Stone Crab Restaurant in Miami Beach (800-780-CRAB) or any number of South Florida fish companies. Islamorada Fish, for instance, in the Keys (800-258-2559), will ship "colossal" claws (the largest grade) for $25 a pound. Smaller grades are less expensive per pound.

By the Way....

Anybody besides us think Linda Tripp is a cross-dresser?

Booty, Booty, Booty

The updated go-go boot (in leather or stretch fabric) has made a smashing comeback. Some of the cooler ones around town are David Aaron's crepe Loco ($172 at Sola) and Espace's Galet ($325 at Saks). To look like the ultimate Bond siren, throw money and comfort to the wind with a pair of Stuart Weitzman's very pointy, knee-length, stretchy suede three-inch stilettos, called Dynamo ($370 at Saks). But playful platforms are ever so much easier to walk in. Kenneth Cole's short leather Platmobile ($198) comes in three colors including popular burgundy. For the truly trendy, John Fluevog's Cece ($139) and Steve Madden's Cynthia ($98 at Sola) feature that groovy post-apocalyptic platform chunk and rubber tread.

Unchained Melodrama

Live Flesh is a story of a vendetta, at once perverse, ennobling and passionate

PEDRO ALMODOVAR'S THE FLOWER OF My Secret was the best film released in the US in 1996. His new Live Flesh happily shows that the Spanish writer-director hasn't fallen back from the giant leap he made with The Flower. If you remember him as a master of sustained hysteria, from his riotous earlier works like Matador and Woman on The Verge of a Nervous Breakdown, discover how Almodovar is now so much more. As he enters middle age, the rebel who mooned post-Franco Spain with his proudly vulgar comedies has grown into an artist. Along with the ironic humor and cinephile pastiche that color his movies, Almodovar draws sincere emotions from his characters and their invariably convoluted situations.

Almodovar's eleventh feature (its Spanish title, Carne Tremula, sounds so much cooler) is based on a novel by Ruth Rendell. He replants it as a Spanish story, setting the prologue in the full flush of fascist paranoia. One night during the January 1970 state of emergency, in a Madrid boarding house, a teenage girl goes into labor. The landlady, Dona Centro—one of those unflappable Almodovar dames—takes the situation in hand. She steps in front of an off-duty bus and demands the driver take them to the hospital. With the baby unwilling to wait, Centro coaches the girl through birth and uses the driver's shoelaces to tie off the umbilical cord. She declares the boy "un nino completissimo." The film tracks Victor's growth from a youth into an hombre, his fate entwined with that of two couples.

Live Flesh is the story of a vendetta, one that is paradoxically perverse and ennobling, childish and mature. After the prologue, we come up for air several years later, and find Victor (Liberto Rabal) trying to re-connect with a woman he had his first sexual experience with the week before in a disco bathroom. Elena (Francesca Neri) is a spoiled druggie who considers Victor a sexual washout. She pulls a gun and demands he leave her apartment. A gunshot is fired and a pair of cops show up, the cartoon macho Sancho (Jose Sancho) and the circumspect David (Javier Bardem). In a panic, Victor holds the gun to Elena. There's a struggle, a damsel-meets-her-knight tingle between Elena and David, and then David is shot. Victor is put in jail for seven years for the assault.

As Victor's release approaches, he sees a TV report on the 1992 Barcelona Olympics. David has become a national hero as part of the Spanish wheelchair basketball team. His wife, cheering on the sidelines, is Elena. Victor, his mother now dead, moves back into their Madrid hovel with the sole purpose of revenge against the woman who belittled him. Hate and love swirl like syrup within him. The beneficiary of Victor's passion is Sancho's abused, adulterous wife Carla (Angela Molina), who becomes his sexual tutor with the relish of a courtesan.

Live Flesh is an unchained melodrama with timeless qualities, but also has subtle barbs for the modern era of commercial exploitation and cultural homogenization. Almodovar, the erstwhile maestro of excess, has evolved as a director of actors—he has learned that less can be more. While Molina, Neri and Bardem are familiar faces from European cinema, Almodovar makes a delightful discovery with newcomer Rabal as Victor. Almodovar and Rabal make the catalyst character amusingly vanilla: Victor operates with a pared-down sense of order, despite his grand passion. As the seemingly perfect couple whose life unravels, Bardem is a pressure cooker and Neri is brittle and yearning (Almodovar depicts David and Elena's sex life as fulfilling and without angst in spite of David's paralysis).

One new element Live Flesh brings to the Almodovar world is the documentary-like scenes of the wheelchair basketball team, real players except for Bardem (who acquits himself well). Sports guys in an Almodovar movie? Hoist a cerveza and enjoy. ✦

Marketing to gays has come a long way with longer still to go

WHEN THE GAY PRESS FIRST CAME ON the scene, it was as insular as could be. Editorial content for gays only and the advertising that kept it going were for businesses with mostly gay customers. In the past 30 years, though, as "target marketing" has become the way advertisers sell their products, "mainstream" companies like Miller Brewing, Nike and Blockbuster have bought ad space in the approximately 175 magazines and newspapers geared to gay and lesbian audiences. This is tremendous for gay magazines and newspapers, but a new survey shows that only a handful of large corporations are buying into the gay press. Maybe it hasn't come quite as far from its roots as one would believe when flipping through those glossy pages of Out or The Advocate.

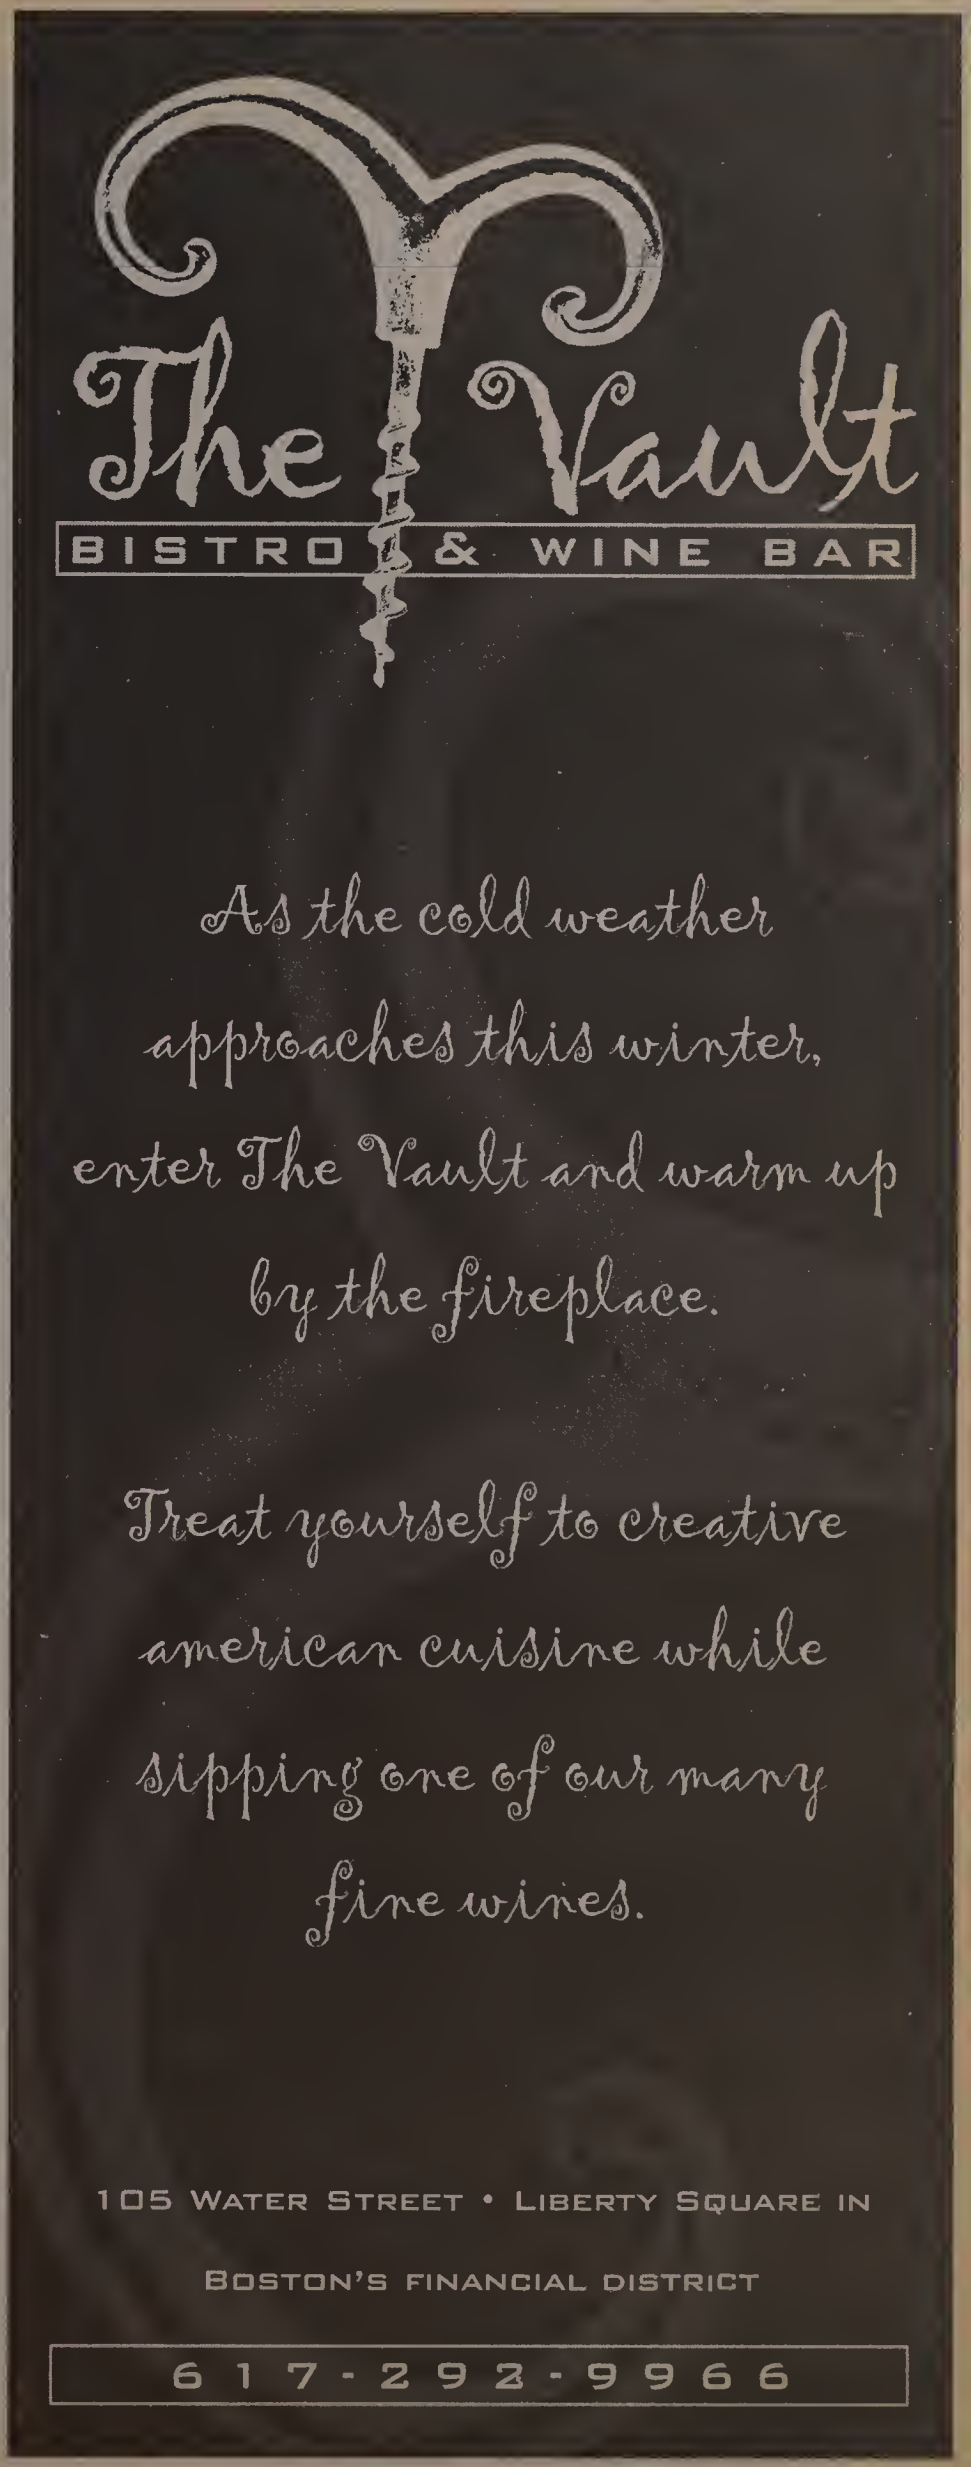
AmEx portrays lesbians.

Simmons Market Research determined that gay people in the nation's 10 largest markets (including Boston) have an average income of $47,090, more than twice the average per capita income of $18,135. And with fewer kids and more leisure time, we gays have money to burn. It's Miller Time all the time in the gay world.

And why not? The Simmons report tells us that of the more than 735,000 readers of gay publications it surveyed, 94 percent said they're more likely to choose the product or service of an advertiser in the gay press. That's helped to attract some $100.2 million in spending in the gay press last year, almost twice the figure from 1994.

Many of corporate America's largest citizens are still ambivalent or even hostile toward gay consumers. It was just a month after Ellen DeGeneres pulled her debutante act that Chrysler Corp. tried to force magazines to disclose content prior to publication so that their Plymouth Voyagers would not be surrounded by "objectionable" content. The carmaker even pulled its ads from an issue of Esquire that featured a sexually direct story by gay writer David Leavitt. The magazine ultimately pulled that piece of fiction and Chrysler stayed in—a pretty high journalistic price to pay.

A few companies, such as Budweiser and American Express, have created ads specifically for the gay community. One AmEx ad for estate planning shows two women embracing on a beach. Dewars and Absolut are among the companies that play a game of footsie with gay consumers by creating quasi-gay ads that in The Advocate appear to be targeting the gay community, but also pop up in Vanity Fair, Entertainment Weekly or GQ (which, I'm told, is not a gay publication).



This helps some overcome the fear that an ad in a gay magazine can be perceived as a political statement in favor of all things gay.

And while it's heartening that corporate America no longer completely ignores gay consumers, there's a long way to go.

One of the problems that the gay press faces when trying to gain new advertisers is the "us against them" paradigm. While many companies recognize that the gay market can create new consumers and stronger loyalties, it can also create a shitstorm of controversy.

The gay and lesbian population is estimated between the conservative (no pun intended) one percent and liberal 10 percent. That means companies run the risk of pissing off at least 90 percent of the country by openly selling cars, cruises or condos to gays. Disney faced the wrath of Southern Baptists when it extended benefits to its gay workers, whose "lifestyle" they strongly—and biblically—object to.

On that point, I'll defer to Miller Brewing, whose ad carries my favorite headline: "For the last time, it's not a lifestyle, it's a life." ✦

MUSIC

Quiet Storm

By Paul Robicheau

World-jazz group Oregon returns to its acoustic, organic laidback roots

RALPH TOWNER IS ON THE PHONE FROM Seattle where, naturally, it's raining. So perhaps it's an apt coincidence that Towner, whose keyboards and acoustic guitars have graced the world-jazz group Oregon for 28 years, makes an analogy between weather and music.

"I'm pushing sounds around—to me, it's like being a weatherman," Towner says. "The pieces are creating an atmosphere or world with its own kind of physical and emotional laws." And Oregon, performing locally for the first time in several years February 18 at Johnny D's, has been at the center of the quiet storm. "We really weathered a lot of cycles that would have killed most bands."

Included in those cycles is the 1984 death of percussionist/sitar player Colin Walcott—who met co-founders Towner, winds player Paul McCandless and acoustic bassist Glen Moore in 1970 when they were all in the Paul Winter Consort—and the departure of subsequent seven-year percussionist Trilok Gurtu. Oregon spent five years as a trio before making new CD Northwest Passage with alternating drummers Arto Tuncboyaciyan and Mark Walker, who has joined the group on tour.

"We play together in a way that you just can't really duplicate with other people," Towner says. "It's almost like a string quartet in terms of sensitivity to dynamics and some incredibly subtle things that we're able to do."

"But Mark has jumped right in, like he's been with us the whole time," says Towner, 57, who has two decades on Walker and has worked with McCandless, Lyle Mays and the Caribbean Jazz Project. "It's hard to find a drummer that has all those skills. They have to be a jazz player, be able to play contemporary classical, atonal stuff, Latin things and a lot of eighth-note music—and then total free-form improvisation. It's quite a load."

Things sound effortless though on the new disc, echoing the more acoustic, organic flavor of '70s Oregon. "It is sorta on the beautiful side again, not that pushy fusion thing that we were into there for a while," Towner says. "We improved by playing as a trio, too. It kinda reestablished being able to hear the instruments so clearly."

"It's revisiting what we do well, a kind of comfort zone in that way," he adds, "and it's bound to have a similarity with some of the earlier records with Colin, because Colin was a lot more laidback."

After some road work, however, Walker is coming into his own on drum kit and hand drums. "Now he has his own voice," Towner says, "and it really affects the direction of the music."

Oregon's signature, however, remains the reeds of McCandless (who plays oboe and English horn as well as soprano sax and bass clarinet) and the guitars of Towner, who began playing classical guitar at age 22 in a contrast to his Bill Evans-influenced piano. At Winter's request, he then developed his unique acoustic 12-string style.

"I play that like a classical player, which is another fluke," says Towner, who spikes deft harmonics on 12-string with his strong fingernails. "No classical player in their right mind would pluck on this thing. It's like sticking your hand in a cheese-grater. It's not that flexible of an instrument. It does what it does. It's pretty limited, but the limitations are really kind of fascinating."

Towner also plays on a new jazz-trio CD with King Crimson drummer Bill Bruford, while McCandless has worked with banjo futurist Bela Fleck. "We've always had our own groups and projects, and it really refreshes," he says. "The only way you can improve is to play with other people in different situations. So there has been no ceiling, no restraint. But there's a thing we've evolved among ourselves that's a singular experience. It's kept its magic after all these years." ✦

Training at the Big Dig Diner...Mum to Maynard's word...Bye-Bye Hillary's

Jody Adams, police Capt. Bob Dunford, Asst. Attorney General Marcie Jackson and Big Dig Diner's Joe Carpinito.

AT LONG LAST, THE BIG DIG DINER, A restaurant that is also a vocational educational project, is steps away from opening its doors on Drydock Avenue in the Boston Marine Industrial Park off Summer Street in early March. An offshoot of the Log School in Dorchester, which helps dropouts earn equivalent degrees, the diner's board of directors includes culinary luminaries such as Jody Adams and Chris Schlesinger (the self-proclaimed laziest chef in Boston), who are now looking for a head chef and general manager/director. Joe Carpinito, director of the program, praised the "whole community of volunteers," largely from the waterfront and industrial park area, plus Mayor Menino, who've supported the diner's creation. The diner will feature traditional fare, with students involved in every aspect of the business. "It will be their laboratory. It's bone fide job training," says Carpinito.

For those anxiously awaiting the opening of Maynard Scarborough's new restaurant, Augusta, Scarborough is being uncharacteristically mum, saying only that he'll announce the location of the southern-style supper club on April Fool's Day. And we'll be expected to believe him?

Jim Becker left his position as executive chef of Rustica in Belmont and is looking to open his own place. He says he envisions a small eatery, featuring the cuisine of what he calls "a largely unexplored region of the Mediterranean." Hmmm.

If you like chowder you can now get some of the best at your local supermarket. The Dan'l Webster Inn on Cape Cod has packaged its all-natural clam and lobster chowders in a concentrate—you add milk or cream—which they say is virtually fat free. They are available at all Star Market and Bread & Circus stores and most fish markets.

As part of the Boston Cooks events, New York cookbook author Jessica Harris whipped up some of her recipes at the Legal C Bar with chef Novilus Petit-Frere. Harris, who specializes in mostly African and Caribbean cooking, is now working on a new book, Africa: A Continent of Cuisines from Algeria to Zimbabwe, to be released by Simon & Schuster later this year.

Alas, a Back Bay Restaurant Group institution is closing its doors. JC Hillary's on Boylston Street is being renovated, and not a moment too soon, given that lunch customers there two weeks ago were treated to chunks of ceiling coming down on their table. Owners won't specify what the new name or concept will be, but street talk has them yearning for a more elegant dining establishment to add to their stable.

With Valentine's Day fast approaching, it's never too soon to come up with something to do on an evening when getting a reservation is harder than following the crisis in the White House. Several restaurants, such as Julien at Le Meridien, are offering special aphrodisiac menus, and Cafe Celador is featuring a display of shadowboxes, created by owner/chef Patrick Noe for his wife Joan. Even if you can't get a reservation at L'Espalier, start phoning around now, or it's the dog house. ✦

Provençale Paradise

By J. Charles Mokriski

Truc brings a true taste of the south of France to the South End

DESPITE ICE AND SNOW ENCRUSTED streets, the South End was hopping on a recent Saturday evening. Foot traffic was substantial as dozens of hungry, discriminating diners trekked to the many estimable eateries that dot the area. Among the newest and most promising of these is Truc, at the corner of Tremont and Clarendon just across the street from Hamersley's, the place where, in a real sense, the South End's transformation into a diner's paradise began.

Ensconced in a narrow storefront, slightly below grade, Truc features a long narrow dining room, stylishly appointed with soft green walls and a smart black lacquer framed mirror extending almost its entire length. A row of banquettes on one side and tables for two on the other seat fewer than 40 in the main dining room, while a small room in back accommodates an additional 16. A handsomely carved white molding joins the walls to a hammered tin ceiling. A vase of colossal white lilies dominates a small counter near the restaurant's entrance, with a series of small black silhouettes adorning the wall in back. Crisp white tablecloths and napkins complete the black and white motif.

Truc's house-made French baguettes are the cqual of any bread available in Boston, although we have grown so used to the obligatory extra virgin olive oil for dipping that we were almost taken aback by the cold butter that appeared instead. The wine list is more than serviceable, even including two selections priced in the high tcens. We enjoyed a 1996 Vin de Pays de Vaucluse, Les Amandiers ($19), a light but enjoyable red, more fruity than earthy but with a distinctive taste of the Provençale soil.

Truc's menu is small, but all the more credible for its focus on specialties of the south of France. Among the appetizers was a frisee salad with smoked salmon and poached egg ($7). This small mountain of greens was dressed in a well-balanced vinaigrette with just the right touch of mustard. The mellow, gently smoked salmon slices were sparse, but tasty. Truc's soupe de poisson ($7), fish soup, boasted a complex and nuanced flavor, combining tomato and saffron in a rich seafood broth with a muted dose of garlic. We were mildly disappointed that the classic accompaniments of garlic croutons, aioli and grated cheese were reduced to a single crouton lathered with a dollop of aioli and pre-deposited in the soup rather than served separately in the traditional fashion.

Truc's main courses continued the emphasis on France's Midi. Braised rabbit, with mashed potato, olives and herbed red wine sauce ($22) was extraordinary (except for the indifferent greens strewn over the top of the dish). From the moist, tender boneless loin wrapped in bacon, to the flavorful morsels left on the bone, the rabbit was enveloped in a rich garlicky sauce that left no doubt as to its Provençale origins. Trout Meuniere ($21) was carefully sautéed to the point of perfect texture, the delicate flesh and flavor enhanced but not masked by butter and lemon, and the bones all but flawlessly removed. It was accompanied by a cast-iron pan of parsleyed potatoes, and a small thicket of al dente green beans.

Our favorite main course was Truc's Cassoulet de Toulouse, a white bean casserole with garlic sausage, duck confit and braised lamb ($23). This classic preparation from France's major southwestern city was superb. While most of the cooking juice had evaporated, it left the duck, lamb and sausage moist and tender, with the exquisite white beans tender but intact. The only main course that disappointed was the steak frites ($21). The steak itself was fine, but it was buried in a grotesque parody of the most exaggerated of presentations—a four inch high pyramid of carrot and parsnip sticks, alongside a veritable mountain of flavorful but soggy french fries.

Desserts at Truc (all $6.50) ranged from very good to extraordinary. Very good was the "classic" crême brulée, light and creamy, with a good caramelized top. Extraordinary was the warm chocolate cake, a gargantuan chocolate confection—warm, moist and dripping with intense chocolate flavor, served on a raspberry coulis and garnished with mint leaves and whipped cream.

Truc's service was friendly and efficient—a trifle too efficient, perhaps, since our check arrived virtually on the heels of our dessert. The staff's efforts to turn over the tables briskly are understandable, as this is a small restaurant and its few tables are much in demand. Since reservations are not accepted, early arrival is a must. We arrived at 6:45 pm Saturday evening and were promptly seated, but the restaurant was full by 7. Indeed, the quality of our repast was ample reward for having to arrive at such an unfashionable hour. ✦

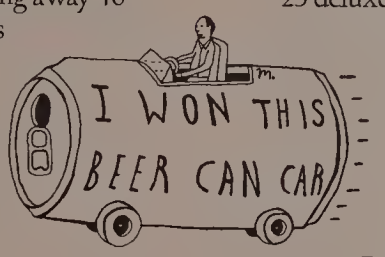
BEER

Sweepstakes



By Peter R. Terhune

Drink beer and win stuff—like a trip to Club Med courtesy of Samuel Adams

WHY DO PEOPLE DRINK BEER? SOME seek solace, others oblivion—a few actually enjoy the flavor. Here's a fourth reason: to win stuff.

Winter and early spring are slow months in the beer business. To drive up consumption and (hopefully) build loyalty that'll pay down the road, many breweries unleash winter promotions. Many of these are merely giveaways of key chains, magnets or pint glasses. Others, however, promise dream-dates with beer-biz luminaries, tropical vacations or the opportunity to own your own pub. I've culled through reams of press releases to find those promotions that offer the best loot. Just remember to mention the IMPROPER when you're asked to supply your winner's testimonial—and call me if you need a travel partner.

Boston Beer Co. is giving away 40 trips to Club Med resorts in the Caribbean and Colorado to promote the release of Samuel Adams White Ale. This sweepstakes and on-air radio giveaway is open to anyone 21-plus; entry information is available wherever Samuel Adams beer is sold. Deadline for entries is April 15. Winners can look forward to scads of fun activities and hob-nobbing with Boston Beer founder Jim Koch. At Club Med Turkoise, for example, winners will join Koch for seven days of dolphin spotting, trapeze-flying, beach parties, scuba-and skin-diving and safaris to nearby Iguana Island. For more information on the competition dial up the Boston Beer website at www.samadams.com, or call (617) 368-5000.

Don't vibrate to the idea of Jim Koch rubbing Coppertone on your shoulders? How about brewing with Bert Grant? The scion of Yakima Brewing & Malting Co., and the man behind Bert Grant's Real Ales, Grant opened America's first brewpub partly in response to enthusiasm for his homebrewed beer. Now Grant's Yakima Brewing & Malting Co. is sponsoring the "Brew A Batch With Bert!" sweepstakes. Prizes include 25 deluxe homebrewing kits. The grand prize is a visit from, and a homebrewing session with, Bert Grant. Entry forms are available at participating retailers or you can send a request for an entry to: Bert Grant's Homebrew Sweepstakes, 1803 Presson Place, Yakima, W.A., 98903. Entries are due May 15.

Here's one you've got to jump on quickly—"Amstel's Dream Date Sweepstakes." Until February 13, folks can call a toll-free number, (888) AMSTEL-LOVE, and register to win one of over 1,000 prizes. Goodies range from a bouquet of flowers to Caribbean vacations. Winners will be notified by Valentine's Day.

Guinness' fifth annual "Win Your Own Pub In Ireland" contest is rapidly approaching. Stout fanatics 21 and older are encouraged to enter to win the keys to the Finucane's Pub in Listowel, County Kerry. Entrants must complete the following sentence in 50 words or less: "Why Guinness is my perfect pint...." Starting in mid-February, entries will be available in retail outlets and establishments serving Guinness and Harp. Consumers can call (888) MYPUB98 for contest details, or enter through Guinness' website at www.guinness.com. Entry deadline is March 31. Ten finalists will be selected in April and will be flown to Ireland, where a panel of judges will select a winner. At the risk of sounding impartial, let me tell you this is one cool contest—even if you don't win the experience of a lifetime. Enter early and often.

Entering all these contests will work up a thirst, of course. You can toast your good luck—and save money for spending on your trip—by heading to the Coolidge Corner Clubhouse at 307A-309 Harvard St. in Brookline. The Clubhouse is charging just $3 for a pint from any of its 35 taps throughout February. With a price like that, everyone's a winner. ✦

More Than Moisturizers

The Pia Aeademy of Moisturizer Arts and Seiences presents its annual Ocean of Lotion awards. And the nominees are:

Elizabeth Arden's Ceramide Time Complex Moisture Cream. Testers say this potion goes on like butt-ah, making it the best moisturizer for any dame who wears foundation and needs a slippery, non-stieky underlayer for a flawless applieation of makeup. It boosted the testers' natural hydration amazingly—our skin looked and felt silky, springy and 10 years younger. Forty-five bueks buys you 1.7 oz.—about eight months' supply.

Whose name will be called when the Best Moisturizer Award is announced?

Oil of Olay Age Defying Series Daily Renewal Cream. Ideal for slightly pimple-prone pretties who want a low budge effective daytime hydrator, this jar of fun offers a mild salicylic aeid that speeds exfoliation. Slap nine bueks on the eounter of your loeal drugstore and walk off with a year's worth of this aeid dropper's smart buy.

Guerlain's Issima Sueeess Night Cream. Every gal wants her G-for-Guerlain-spot earessed with this night rider of a lotion. Mornings are easier to face after sleeping with Issima Suceess. Testers notieed plumper, glowing and downright dewier skin that made the whopping $145 priee tag worth every penny.

Cellex C Skin Firming Cream Plus. This is my personal skin heroine, the ONLY eream that actually removes—and I mean eliminates—fine lines in the face. Skin Firming Cream Plus is the first, and in my book, the only high-potency Vitamin C super dee duper antioxidant product out there. A few things, though: It stings when you put it on, so you ultra-sensitive Sallys and Seymours should stay elear. Super dry skin types should apply another moisturizer on top. Onee you stop using it, your skin will resume its natural aging—but you won't want to stop. Ninety-five dollars gets you 2 oz.—and sinee you use so little, this should last well over a year. Purehase it from the well-trained staff at Colonial Drug at 49 Brattle St. or eall (800) CELLEX C to order it direetly or find a salon near you.

Natura Bisse's Oxygen Cream. Puffing away on those Virginia Slims might make you look all eool, but that nicotine is depleting your skin of oxygen, leaving it dehydrated, gray and lifeless. Skin eare seiencc has eome a long way, baby—now we have Natura Bisse's remarkable Oxygen Cream to eountcraet dullness eaused by smoking and other impure aetivities. Its hydrogen peroxide derivatives stimulate cireulation, making your faee as fresh as it was that day you took your first drag. Find this Europcan favorite at Neiman Marcus in Copley Plaee. Fifty-two buekaroonies buys a 2.5 oz. jar that should last over a year.

And the award goes to...You readers, for having such lovely faees to begin with!

Washing Mr. Right

We gals want you men to smell yummy, not like the Giorgio cologne-breathing beasts freaky fashion designers apparently long to create. Our tastes and whiffs of your skin should smell like you—on a clean day, of course.

That's why today's fair maid should saddle her steed and trot out to buy her beefy Valentine something earthy and enticing chosen from Borghese's line of scented bath gels, body lotions and hair care products. These cleansers, long the male testers' favorites, leave a rich, yet subtle scent on the skin. Borghese's Foaming Gel is swanky in the shower for lathering up his well-cut pecs. And the herbal shampoo and conditioner give his flaky scalp the tender love it needs. All of these goodies exude an aroma of drop dead luxury in a romantically decaying Italian villa.

For decadence without dandification, give me a man who wears the faint smell of Borghese grooming products and you'll see one melted Pia. Take a sniff for yourself at any Borghese counter at Filene's or Saks. The Foaming Gel alone would make a perfect love token at 30 bucks for a jumbo 16 oz. pump bottle.

Nothing beats the smell of a man washed in Borghese.

Foltene—Fine And Full Of It

Most products for fine or thinning hair dry it out to make it look frizzier and, supposedly, fuller. Others coat each strand with a Windex squeaky stickiness that makes a delicate mane look like a Woolworth's wig. Not Foltene, though. This hair care line makes fine and thinning hair look full and healthy by zapping nutrients into each slender shaft.

Tricosaccaride may sound like a new species of dinosaur, but no—it's the stuff that makes Foltene products pop. After a month on these fur nourishing treatments, the testers and I looked as if our hair had had a facelift, to the amazement of our respective hair stylists.

Stressed-out strands, post-pregnancy hair as brittle as glass or newly graying locks losing their vitality get a lift from Foltene. Even dandruff suffering testers noticed a slow down in snow fall from this prescription-free solution for men and women.

Foltene's line includes a multivitamin Topical Scalp Treatment in one-dose vials, a Thick Gel and a Volume Spray that give volume to fine-haired fillies while leaving the hair touchable and not poofy, and a couple of shampoos and a conditioner that leave hair at its healthiest.

So stop that complaining about having a bad hair year and head over to a drugstore or a Sally Beauty Supply (call (800) 284-SALLY for a store near you), and relive your 'Tene years. See ya in the girl's room!

A hair line for the finer heads.

Soroff/On NIK CARTER

WBCN'S AFTERNOON DEEJAY WAS RAISED IN CAMBRIDGE AND STUDIED theater at NYU, Circle in the Square and with legendary coach Lee Strasberg. He also worked in college radio, and upon returning to Boston, hounded every station in town for a job, landing one at WFNX, where he worked for seven years. After a brief stint in Providence, he was hired by 'BCN to do nights, and, in November, the station made the controversial decision to give him veteran Mark Parenteau's job. Carter has earned further notoriety for a much publicized on-air pissing match with WAAF. Thirtyish, he lives alone, in Cambridge, where Jonathan Soroff found him, at the crack of noon, getting ready to face the day.

Jonathan Soroff: Have you always been a wiseass?
Nik Carter: I see myself as more goofy than a wiseass, but I guess yeah, I pretty much came out of the womb crackin' wise.
JS: As a kid, what did your report cards say?
NC: I always got "Nik could do better." I got sent to the school psychologist a lot, for things like an idea I had for a film, called The Death of Rasputin, which basically consisted of me and a friend beating another kid over the head with a stick. My mother would say, "He's a pain in the ass, but he's not crazy." It was a Quaker school, and to this day, I can't walk past a box of oats without shuddering.
JS: Why are people so amazed to find out you're black?
NC: I'm absolutely dumbfounded by that. That's a ballsy question, by the way. I don't know why that is.
JS: Is it racist? Y'know—you're not speaking Ebonics, or playing R&B.
NC: I don't think so. It's probably unfamiliarity. Radio is theater of the mind, and people form an idea of what you look like, so their expectations are bound to be disappointed.
JS: Why does Metallica still have a career?
NC: I'm sure their hardcore fans are bummed about their new kinder, gentler, sound. But hey, they've gotta eat, too.
JS: What percentage of your listeners smoke pot?
NC: I can't count that high without an abacus.
JS: You live in Cambridge. Does that give you a complex?
NC: Yeah. I feel like—Where's my Volvo and my 2.4 children? I'm surprised they let me live here. But what baffles me more is why everyone who comes to my house is so amazed that I don't live like a rat in some shithole.
JS: It's the rock 'n' roll thing.
NC: Well, if Courtney Love can wear Versace, I can live in a nice place.
JS: Fair enough. So both you and Matt Damon grew up here and were into acting. Did you know him?
NC: A little. I used to see him at casting calls a lot.
JS: Up for the same parts, were you?
NC: Yeah, the blond-haired, blue-eyed, chiseled featured white guy. When I saw him at auditions, I'd just go get a sandwich.
JS: What rock star would you most like to sleep with?
NC: Juliana Hatfield, but I think she already knows that.
JS: True or False: Since (fellow 'BCN deejay) Neal Robert cut his hair, he looks like '70s icon Burt Convey?
NC: Actually, his picture on our Web page looks like something from a blaxploitation film.
JS: I have a theory: Old rock stars, like Rod Stewart, should be sent to an island where they can't make a spectacle of themselves or wear spandex. Any thoughts?
NC: Yeah. I believe that part of being really good is knowing when to quit.
JS: Drew Bledsoe stage-diving at the Everclear concert. Any advice?
NC: Stay home and watch MTV, dude. It's safer.
JS: What's worse: A papercut or a Boston accent?
NC: A Boston accent's more painful.
JS: Have you ever had a stalker, like Clint Eastwood in Play Misty for Me?
NC: Several, but they've mostly been teenage girls, so I never signed a restraining order, because I didn't want to fuck up their lives. Having said that, I'll probably get a few more.
JS: What's the worst thing that's ever happened to you on air?
NC: At 'FNX, someone got shot right outside the studio. I heard the gun and saw the chalk body-outline.
JS: Has the FCC ever fined you for foul language?
NC: Never. I'm not a shock jock. I'm just some goof playing music.
JS: What swear words are okay to use on the air?
NC: Asshole is pretty much it.
JS: Who would you rather be stuck on an elevator with: Julio Iglesias or Yanni?
NC: Can I bring a revolver?
JS: Any unusual body-piercings we should know about?
NC: Nope. I'm not half as cool as people think.
JS: Should trendy facial hair be taxed?
NC: Absolutely. Allston alone would take care of the deficit.
JS: What's the longest you've ever had a girlfriend?
NC: Four years, which should've been two.
JS: Who do you most admire?
NC: The guy who invented Post-It Notes. A truly underappreciated, mad genius.
JS: What's the first album you ever bought?
NC: There were two, but one of them had "Billy Don't be a Hero" on it. That's a big admission.
JS: What's the most embarrassing thing in your record collection?
NC: I have a Cesar Romero album, complete with a script, called Learn to be an Actor. I'm also a not-so-proud owner of both the Spice Girls and Hanson, but they were gifts from record company weasels.
JS: Ten years from now, where will you be?
NC: Gainfully employed, I hope. ✦

But the Battle of the Sexes Now Comes With Referees and Coaches

By Kristen Bisson

IF LOVE WERE A CAR, I'D OPT FOR A BRAND NEW, SEXY CONVERTIBLE WITH A bulletproof exterior, satiny leather seats and a purr of an engine to shoot onto the freeway at 80 mph in three seconds and go a gazillion miles on one tank.

Your typical 26-year-old Boston woman caught between the ladder of success and illusion of a white picket fence, I spent much of 1997 driving what I originally thought the perfect model, until I went too fast and blew a gasket, before screeching to a halt in front of a stop sign marked "commitment." Instead of exchanging it for something more dependable, I patched it up as best I could without a manual and kept chugging along a quagmire of dark roadway, no map, until I'd pretty much chitty chitty bang banged my way into heartbreak.

This four-wheel-drive of a tortured metaphor is inspired by Richard and Antra Borofsky. A married couple, he is a clinical psychologist, she a marriage and family therapist; together they are founders of the Center for the Study of Relationship in Cambridge.

And relationships—dear readers on the brink of the much anticipated/despised Valentine's Day—aren't getting any easier.

In the politics of love, the rules have changed. Where do we stand collectively in 1998? We are neither here nor there—we know where we came from, as many of us in our 20s and 30s are the children of divorce. Like victims of secondhand smoke, we have invisible scars from watching our parents split up.

The American public has made millionaires of people like John Gray, the Men Are From Mars, Women Are From Venus guru, whose books don't even make it back on library shelves before being checked out again, and again. Several hundred books on related topics are published each year. This is the age of therapy and self help. Boston/Cambridge, always a hub of self-absorption—if not psychobabble, a term coined 20 years ago by a Boston writer—manifests particular types of interpersonal problems, and invites myriad approaches to solving them. Look in the Yellow Pages under "counselors" and you've got a lot of options.

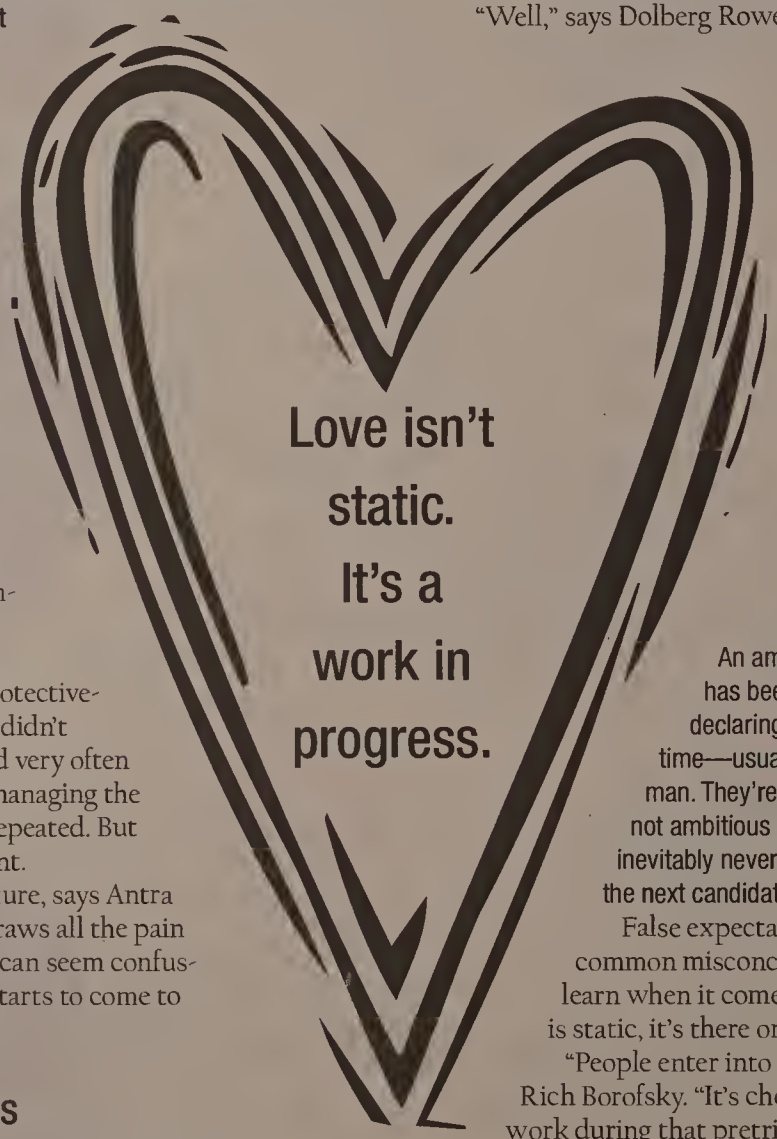
What's happening is that some 30 years after the sexual revolution, couples still fight and break up over the same old things, although the roles have shifted. Experts say this shifting is especially pertinent in Boston, given its concentration of highly educated, professionally ambitious singles. On one side, our town is heavily populated with independent (what used to be called liberated) females, with definitive expectations and high standards, in greater proportion, if not numbers, than in other cities.

Boston has also become a nexus for the burgeoning "New Man" movement, with scores of workshops, seminars and classes on the topic—similar to what occurred with females a generation ago—of how to "have it all."

"Men are just learning how to talk about feelings," says Cambridge psychotherapist Greta Bro, "when men's culture and the culture at large don't really support that yet."

We know what draws couples together—sparkles, hot flashes, yummy eye contact. What breaks us apart, and once torn, how do we get back together?

They Want to Suck Your Love



Susan, 29, of Brighton, thought she'd met "the one," when she began dating Alex, 30, of Boston. Though he admitted having a history of brief relationships, he was charming, sensitive and seemed very "into" her. They began sleeping together on the third date. She met his family soon after. A month later, he backed off, claiming he didn't want to be seriously involved. His parents had been through a bad divorce and he wanted to make absolutely sure he was with the right woman before he committed to a serious relationship.

Little did Susan know, she'd met Dracula.

Greta Bro would describe this scenario as a push/pull dynamic, a situation she sees frequently among singles. In the push/pull, "people get very intimate for a small period of time and then go away," says Bro. Often, they are skittish about getting closer, casting a jaundiced eye toward marriage, due to painful family history or past love affairs that ended badly. People in these situations "need intimacy, everyone wants nurturing and connection, but it creates a kind of vampirism," suggests Bro, as in getting quick fixes of love, without being able to maintain a lasting relationship. Usually one, sometimes both lovers cause the inevitable breakup.

The detritus of divorce creates a cynicism, a self-protectiveness among young people today, she notes. As in "if it didn't work for my parents, why should it work for me." And very often this jumping in and out of relationships comes from managing the terror of abandonment, the fear that the loss will be repeated. But in doing so, we end up perpetuating that abandonment.

Intimacy can induce fear because of its intense nature, says Antra Borofsky. "When there's love present," they say, "it draws all the pain [of past bad relationships, family wounds, etc.], so it can seem confusing because just as you are getting close, all the fear starts to come to the surface."

Speeding Infractions

What the hell just happened? is how George, 27, of East Boston, felt after going to bed with Allison, 25, of Boston, on the third date. The chemistry was great, the sex was great, but the relationship was suddenly on a fast track he wasn't ready for. "I thought, I don't even know this girl," says George, explaining most of his girlfriends started out as friendships first. Still together after three months, they've put the brakes on by going at a slower pace emotionally and physically.

Another dynamic Bro sees often is related, but different: a pattern of premature intimacy in which a couple gets sexually involved quickly, perchance mistaking lust (with all its baggage) for love. And, in the process, impeding the natural rhythm of a relationship, "instead of giving it a nice spacious time of unfolding like a flower, a dance, a symphony," she says.

Another factor that may impel freshly minted couples to embrace togetherhood, with all its external trappings, may be the intensity to which young professionals aspire to succeed in the career world these days. The Borofskys say they see a lot of couples who put work first and foremost on their "most important" lists. Devoting time to exploring each other's psyches gets short shrift.

"The downside to Boston," says Rich Borofsky, "is that people are so smart and so driven that often relationships are a casualty, especially among people in their 20s and 30s."

Just as the push/pull dynamic perpetuates abandonment, premature intimacy perpetuates becoming glued. "All of a sudden people glom on to you," says Bro, "or call you all the time. It's much too fast."

Seasonal Disorder

Lynn, 28, of Cambridge, just broke up with her boyfriend of six years, Matt, 31. He's a great guy, has a good job, is loving and giving, and...wants to get married. Lynn loves him as a person, she's just not in love with him anymore and doesn't know how to get the sizzle back, though she would desperately like to. She's currently taking some time away to figure out if he's the man she wants to spend the rest of her life with. What if there's someone better for her out there?

"A big reason people break up is that they think they're not in love anymore," says Joyce Dolberg Rowe, a longtime Boston psychotherapist and director of the only Boston-area Mars & Venus Counseling Center (meaning she was trained by the aforementioned John Gray).

Once the lust is gone, and people move out of the honeymoon phase, the "springtime of love," she explains, everybody wants to know why it isn't like it was in the beginning.

"Well," says Dolberg Rowe, "because the hormones the goddess put inside us to bring people together—the magnetism, the rose-colored glasses and pedestals—change, whether it takes four months, a year or two years. Gradually the magic recedes, and you enter the summer of love. Summer's when couples work out their differences, and if you don't have the communication skills, it can be a hot, sticky season."

The goal, of course, is to make it through the phase after the sizzle subsides, to make it to the comfort zone. You understand and trust your partner, you know their strengths, weaknesses. You accept them, they accept you.

"Couples that hang in there," says Dolberg Rowe, "understand that you're going to go through that period, whether is takes one year, four or 10—hopefully not that long."

Fool for Love

An ambitious career woman on the fast track, Andrea, 30, of Back Bay, has been through one boyfriend after another since college, several times declaring "this is the one," only to find fault with them after a period of time—usually a year—when she realizes they're not her picture-perfect ideal man. They're inevitably not as romantic as she'd like, not good enough in bed, not ambitious enough. Is she too demanding, she wonders in frustration, but inevitably never sticks around long enough to figure it out, preferring to move on to the next candidate.

False expectations are another reason lovers break up. Two very common misconceptions, say the Borofskys, are that there isn't anything to learn when it comes to loving someone—that it should be easy—and that love is static, it's there or it isn't, as opposed to a work in progress.

"People enter into relationships with the idea that it's spontaneous," explains Rich Borofsky. "It's chemistry, it's either going to work or it's not—and it may work during that pretrial offer. They say, it's fabulous, I've met my soulmate. Then somehow it begins to fizzle out and it gets difficult."

Changing the way we think about love, the way we envision ourselves falling and staying in love, may be the key to making it last. Difficult for a society weaned on Disney's Cinderella and movies like Love Story (sure, Ali McGraw dies before she and Ryan O have time to start arguing about the mundane)—but not impossible.

There's Something Contagious Going Around

Kim, 26, of Brighton, broke up with Matt, 26, of Boston, after a turbulent two-year relationship, not because she didn't love him anymore—because she couldn't deal with him anymore. Her complaints were that he did cocaine, partied a lot, was generally unreliable and kept her distant from his family because of an alcoholic father he didn't want her to meet. She felt as though these were huge areas of his life in which she was not involved, and try as she might to get through to him about her concerns, it was a feat she finally gave up on. A pattern had developed in which she would complain, he would make an effort to please her for a while, but inevitably they ended up back in the same old standoff. Kim didn't realize she was suffering from a bad case of resentment flu.

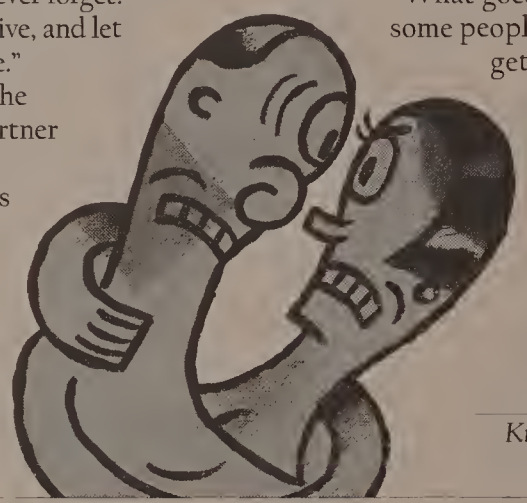
How do you get a woman out of 'resentment flu'? asks Dolberg Rowe.

This is perhaps the greatest cause of breakup and divorce. A malady found in long relationships or marriages, resentment flu sets in when a woman feels she is 'not being heard' by her partner. For sure, the scenario can be the reverse, with the man feeling slighted, but keep in mind that we're generalizing for the sake of capturing the big picture. Women like to talk about their problems, it relieves them, say the therapists, as opposed to most men who don't like to talk about their problems, preferring to solve them on their own.

"A woman will go to a man and say this is bothering me," says Dolberg Rowe, "and this is bothering me, and goddamnit, I'm sick of this, and the man will say all right. He'll try for a week or two and then slip back into old behaviors. One month later, they'll go through it again."

And again, and again, until the woman gets tired of "talking to the wall" and suddenly the man is calling Dolberg Rowe because his wife or his girlfriend is leaving him. Men call her far more than women do, she says, since men tend to deal mostly on the basis that if it ain't broke, don't fix it. I don't know what happened, they'll say, I didn't realize anything was wrong.



"A man won't understand that a woman's serious. They think that when she's finished flapping her jaws and she's forgiven him and they make love and everything's OK, that she's forgotten about it. But guess what? Women never forget."

So what does he need to do? "Give and give and give and give, and let her tell you what a dodo you've been, listen and acknowledge."

The converse—again, generalizing the gender roles—is the silent sufferer, who is more often than not the man. This partner will voice displeasure at certain behaviors of the beloved, perhaps emphatically, perhaps wimpishly. When it happens again and again, he'll eventually say, definitively, but not necessarily hostilely, cut it out. Because it fails to reach the woman's threshold of "An Issue," she ignores the clear and present danger. One day, there's one less egg to fry—forever—and she doesn't know why. ("I didn't know he was serious....")

So what does she need to do? Understand that his means of expressing hurt and frustration may be strange to her, but the message is very real, and must be taken very seriously.

Of course, the bottomline of all these exercises in communication is that no one is perfect. No one will behave all the time in a manner that is just the way you want. Accept flaws and failures. Make compromises and tradeoffs. Or spend an awful lot of time gazing at your navel.

Back to the Future

The Borofskys analogize that the 20th century has been about liberation of form, especially the form of marriage. And these last hundred years have been like the adolescence of relationship, what with marriage and divorce being treated far more cavalierly than in the past, sometimes like a passing fancy. Humorously, they cite examples like taking vows while jumping out of planes or scuba diving.

But the pendulum is swinging back, with the capriciousness "winding down," says Rich Borofsky. "Relationship and marriage are entering the 20s stage," as in the progression from adolescence to young adulthood. "In the 21st century, there's going to be a lot more maturity and stability around relationship. There's an increased value now on what it takes to make a relationship work, on creating a lifetime relationship."

"What goes on in the changing of any human system," adds Greta Bro, "is that some people break through [old traditions] and then the collective begins to get ahold of it and before you know it, everybody is working at it on some level."

Indeed, as adults have long known, marriage or longlasting relationships entail work. And while love still doesn't come with an instructional manual, nowadays professionals like the Borofskys use terms like "coaching" and "tools" to describe help for couples.

Exhorts Dohlberg Rowe: "Understand and respect, accept and learn the available tools, so you can have happy healthy relationships and change the face of marriage in this country. People need to understand these problems are easy to fix." ✦

BROADSIDE AGAINST IRONSIDES

Will the Navy and New York pirate away our USS Constitution?

by PHIL PRIMACK

FOLKS IN NEW YORK CITY HAVE been trying hard to get the Navy to allow Old Ironsides to sail into their harbor. And the Navy has considered it. And yes, all kinds of ports, from Portland to Newport News, would love to see the oldest commissioned warship in the world unfurl those eye-popping new sails in their own waters.

But the Navy has now said the old ship will be right here in her Boston home for Sail Boston's July 11-16, 2000 event. Besides, no one—certainly not the Navy—would ever knowingly jeopardize this national treasure, right?

Sort of.

While Secretary of the Navy John H. Dalton has indeed committed the USS Constitution to Sail Boston's dates, the possibility remains very much alive that this maritime legend that has become PR gold for a beleaguered Navy could become a touring "ship of state," bound for varying periods of time to varying ports. Even that July 4, 2000 visit to New York has not yet been officially ruled out, according to Navy spokesmen.

"The Navy is keeping all options open for participation of USS Constitution for any Fourth of July (2000) events or activities," said a Navy official in Washington who asked not to be named due to the explosive nature of the potential 'piracy.' "No final decisions have been made," said the official, who added that it would be logistically possible for the ship to be in New York on July 4 and back in Charlestown a week later.

The Navy insists that any such moves would be permitted only after exhaustive tests and actual sea trials. Still, some people with special ties to this 200-year-old, made-in-Boston vessel remain nervous.

"Old Ironsides has a lot of sisters resting on the bottom of the ocean, and if it's all the same, I'd just as soon not see her join them," said Rick Amirault, the USS Constitution's commanding officer from 1991 to 1995. "My concern isn't that the Navy's enthusiasm [to show off the ship] would override judgment, but that the costs of doing the proper testing might be so high that they do not do the extensive testing necessary before allowing an open-sea voyage.

"You can do all kinds of computer modeling and paper analyses. Then you go to sea and find it doesn't work. You say let's go back to the drawing board—but meanwhile, there no longer is an Old Ironsides."

Even if the ship were indeed fully fit and safe to sail, the idea of losing Old Ironsides for any period of time, especially during July 4 festivities for which the ship has long been the Boston Harbor anchor, has local officials worrying about another kind of calamity, this one to the local tourism economy.

"Old Ironsides is our number one historic attraction, drawing about one million people a year," said Greater Boston Convention and Visitors Bureau president Patrick Moscaritolo. Only the Museum of Fine Arts (1.5 million visitors) and Museum of Science (1.3 million) top the Constitution as a tourism draw, said Moscaritolo, who takes very seriously the threat that these tourism dollars could literally float away.

"This is an issue we have to grapple with now," he said. "The fact that we've apparently nailed down a decision that Old Ironsides will be here to greet the tall ships [Sail Boston hopes to secure] in 2000 is just part of this overall issue. The upside to the fact that the ship is able to sail again is that it has drawn all kinds of national attention. The downside is that the successful sailing makes it feasible enough for engineers to say it can make out-of-Boston excursions."

This ruckus is tied to last July's dramatic debut of Old Ironsides as a born-again sailing ship. Its under-its-own-power slow sail to Marblehead was not only an enormously big deal here, but across the country. The Navy basked in the ship's glow.

Shortly after the Marblehead sail, a group called Operation Sail asked the Navy about getting the USS Constitution to New York Harbor for July 4, 2000, as the highlight of an East Coast tall ships tour OpSail is organizing.

"To see the Constitution sailing into New York Harbor...this is a once in a lifetime event," OpSail vice president Gregory Perrin told the Boston Globe in September. "That's our proposal" and "the Navy has indicated a desire to accept."

That sent Mayor Thomas Menino into a tizzy, especially since he is backing a competing Tall Ships plan—Sail Boston—which has contracted with Boston-based Conventures to bring to this city the same tall ships Operation Sail claims it has already lined up for other cities on the same dates.

This battle of the Tall Ships has already generated enough hot air to sail an entire flotilla. Dusty Rhodes and Mayor Menino are pulling out all the political stops to get the vessels here for a July 12-15 celebration (the time when OpSail plans for them to be in New London). PR powerhouse George Regan, who's on the competing side with the OpSail folks, says the ships will arrive July 20. And this battle over 'shipping' rights is an undercurrent in the battle over Constitution sailing—and bragging—rights.

"Because of the Sail Boston-Operation Sail competition, we learned a long time ago of OpSail's intent to bring the Constitution to New York," said Conventures president Dusty Rhodes. "At first, we thought it was preposterous. But as months went on, not only did we realize it was not preposterous, but there were strong letters from OpSail to the Navy making the request. We were told by very high level people that the letter of request had reached Dalton and was under serious consideration."

Menino, Senators John Kerry and Edward Kennedy and Rep. Joseph Moakley all wrote Dalton, seeking commitments for both the Constitution and the aircraft carrier John F. Kennedy to be in Boston for July 4, 2000.

In late December, Dalton replied. The JFK's availability depends upon operational commitments, he said. "With regard to USS Constitution, it is my pleasure to commit this national treasure to Boston for the July 11-16 celebration in the year 2000. The Navy is proud to continue its partnership with Boston on this occasion."

Perrin and other Operation Sail officials in New York did not return calls about how hard they may still try to land the ship for their event.

Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II—in whose district the ship is berthed—also wrote Dalton, asking not just about plans for open ocean sailing, but insisting on full precautions to safeguard what Kennedy called "a national treasure that must be vigilantly protected."

Dalton's answer to Kennedy certainly left the port open to Constitution voyages well beyond Boston Harbor, though only under careful conditions.

"As with any commissioned Navy vessel, operations and movement of [the Constitution] must be responsive to the needs of the Navy," Dalton wrote.

"Any movement of USS Constitution outside the protected waters of Massachusetts Bay must be supported by data from state-of-the-art model and tank tests," the letter said. "Further tests will include at-sea operations under specified conditions in the Massachusetts Bay area to verify tank and test data."

Recognizing local firestorm potential, Dalton added that due to "the sensitivity involved regarding the unique challenge of employing USS Constitution outside the Massachusetts Bay area, any employment will be made in full consultation with all pertinent Navy, Congressional and Boston offices."

In fairness, a strong case can indeed be made for the USS Constitution's visiting other ports as it did in the 1930s, when it toured 90 cities over four years in a national tour that helped save the ship. Old Ironsides remains an active, on-duty Navy ship. The Navy, not the city or state, put up the $12 million for the 43-month overhaul that enabled it to sail again. The Navy, not the city, even pays for upkeep of the pier where the ship is moored.

"We view the Constitution as a Boston icon, but you can make a strong argument that we are being parochial," even Pat Moscaritolo admitted. ✦

WHAT SUFFICED FOR KIPLING'S KHAYYAM MAY LEAVE today's lusty customers cold. But regardless of your personal criteria, there are restaurants in this town that could convince even the staunchest skeptic to admit it's possible to rekindle romance. From lavish to understated, for lovers or first-time daters, Boston has the romance.

But everyone has a different idea about what romance is. Some prefer a sexy atmosphere, like Steve Johnson of the Blue Room, who says he likes Biba for just that reason. "It's not necessarily intimate," but in spite of the scale of the decor, it's rich and dramatically beautiful. "It always makes you feel like getting dressed up," he says, adding that the food Lydia Shire and Susan Regis produce has a sort of aphrodisiac quality to it.

A NEW GENERATION OF CABLE

While some may not consider a large room a romantic spot, these rooms can come with intrinsic beauty that envelops you and makes you feel transported into your own private dining room. Many of the hotel restaurants in the city are large rooms, but no less inspiring than what might be considered typically romantic. Julien, at Le Meridien, is an enormous yet warm room, and surprisingly quiet for its vaulted ceiling structure. It's decorated in a Renaissance-revival style, with wingback chairs, gold leaf-edged ceilings and five chandeliers. Of all the restaurants mentioned, Julien is the most elaborate, but all celebrate romance with style and grace.

At Rialto, in the Charles Hotel in Cambridge, dark blue decor and sultry lighting add to the mood of erotic elegance. The booths that line the room offer comfortable privacy, and the opportunity to sit close. In the bar, low overstuffed chairs hug small tables for intimate drinks.

Clio, at the Eliot Hotel, has a much lighter color scheme, but the ecru and warm brown are relaxing. Here, it's easy to be lulled into quiet conversation over delicate food, and the leopard print carpet practically purrs, stretching the length of the room and down the stairs to an elegant lounge.

One thing that characterizes all these restaurants, apart from their hotel locations, is discreet service. The waitstaff glide to and from the table, careful not to interrupt and seemingly in tune with the desires of the diners. Clio's management is especially gifted in this area. Obliging and well informed, they can recommend the perfect wine or champagne to complement the sexy dining experience.

Still, small intimate restaurants are hard to beat when it comes to propagating romance. The current trend in restaurant design is bright lights. As restaurateur Chris Schlesinger noted, "Romantic restaurants aren't easy to come by these days." (Schlesinger raises another caveat: If you're looking for a quiet spot, be wary; a quiet restaurant can often mean it's not busy and possibly not very good.) Small places are often more darkly lit, but not so much that you can't see, and they lack the bustle of larger establishments. If the food is good, the wine list is decent, and the service at the very least adequate, it's hard to go wrong.

The North End is endemically romantic, but a couple of its restaurants are standouts because they include everything needed for an evening that will leave you warm and fuzzy, if not lustful. Suspend your disbelief for a moment and imagine the streets are the narrow ones of Florence or Rome. There you come across Pomodoro, with its tiny awning and old wooden chairs outside for waiting diners. A meal here is good in all seasons, but summer is especially nice because it makes the wait less taxing. The manager and sole waitress will often bring out a plate of calamari to tide you over until you get into the tiny dining room. There are no more than 12 tables and the open kitchen lends earthy atmospherics.

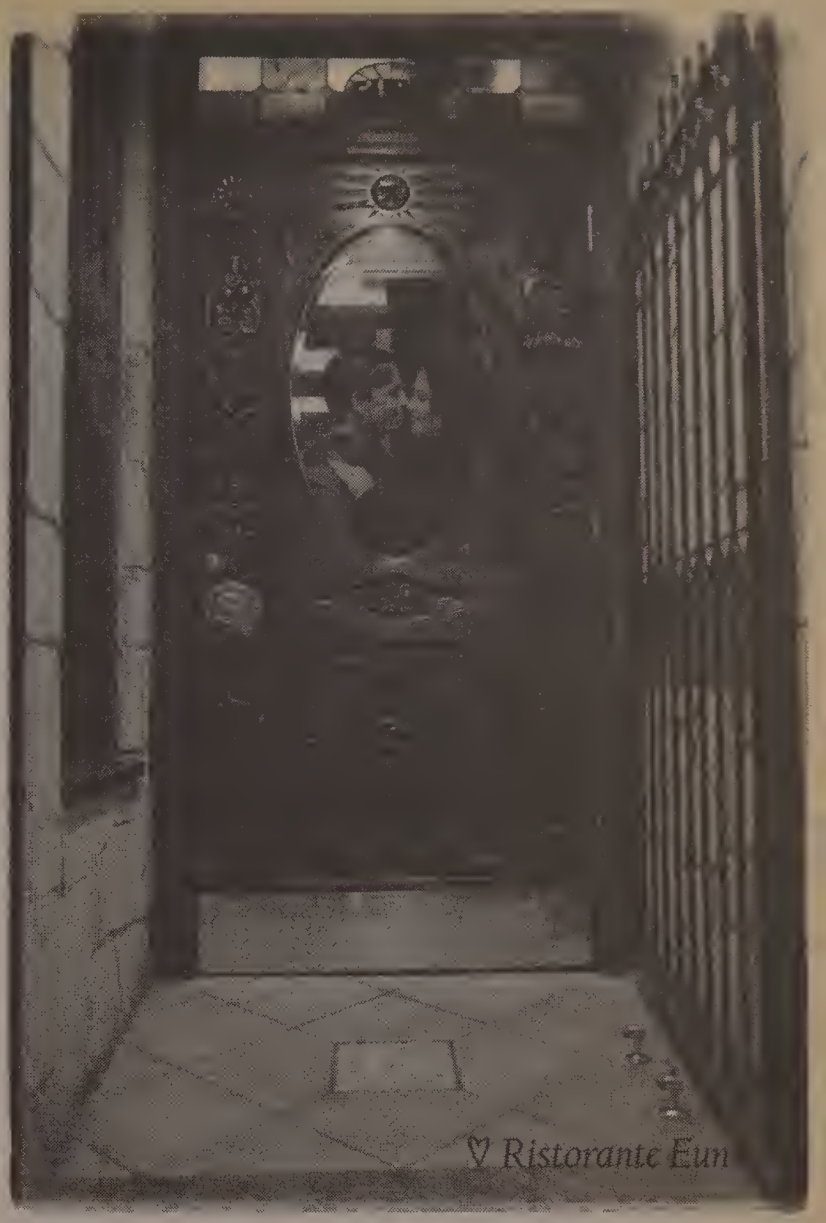
Along another narrow street, Salem, sits Ristorante Euno. The most engaging aspect of this restaurant is its downstairs. The low, arched ceilings and walls are brick, and the tables are all within warming distance of the fireplace. You get the feeling that you're dining in an old and secret wine cellar. It's dark and mysterious, a perfect spot for whispering sweet nothings across a candlelit table.



Over in Cambridge, not only is Upstairs at the Pudding an institution, it oozes romance. The slow climb up the stairs to the restaurant is worth it to get to the core atmosphere. While it is illegal to have an open flame in Cambridge without the presence of a fire marshal, in summer, it's hard to beat the twinkly-lighted patio, draped with vines and scented with delicious smells wafting from the kitchen.

Also in Cambridge, on hard-to-find Craigie Circle is Cafe Celador. But if you make the effort to get to this restaurant nestled under an apartment building, it's a pleasure. Perhaps it's more homey and creative than romantic, but it's small enough to make patrons cozy.

The French seem to have a corner on the intimacy market, and there is something intrinsically romantic about a bistro. Perhaps because Paris is not only the city of lights, but of love, having a touch of it here is a romantic notion. Because it is so popular, Les Zygomates on South Street can be noisy and crowded toward the end of the week. But go there early in the week and sit way back in the corner, nestled against the plush red banquettes. Restaurant Zinc is also better in the early part of the week, when the overflow from Mistral hasn't invaded. Even sitting at the shiny bar, with a votive candle reflecting off the top and the subtle attention of the barkeep, can make for a little bit of first-date fun.

L'Espalier, a step above the flirtation of a bistro, is true love. Employees at the restaurant make jokes about the number of engagements that have occurred in one of the three dining rooms. Two rooms on the first floor are even named "courtship" and "seduction." Each room has a slightly different mood and color scheme, to suit your fancy. It is a positively serene atmosphere, with the ability to raise romance to a very sophisticated level.

Still, romance is in the eye and mind of the beholder. A quiet dinner in front of the fire at home is just as soothing as any restaurant creation, although you aren't waited on and end up with a pile of dishes. And though no one can force romance onto or out of anyone, an already created atmosphere is a good jumping off place and saves the hassle of having to be too creative. None of these restaurants comes with a guarantee, but they exude intimacy and warmth—a combination that could lead to anything. ✦

OUR MOTTO: "Miles and Smiles"

"A carnivore's dream... Boston's Best New Steakhouse."

—The Improper Bostonian Magazine

"Plaza III is Gourmet Greatness."

—The Phantom Gourmet

"The focus is on the quality of the steak, flown in daily...from their own meat company. Memories are made of beef like this, the savory notes hitting high in the palate, filling the mouth with texture and aroma."

—Alison Arnett, The Boston Globe

"A touch of class has come to Faneuil Hall Marketplace with the arrival of Plaza III...first class restaurants are hard to find here, especially a topnotch steak house."

—Gus Saunders, The Boston Herald 1/2

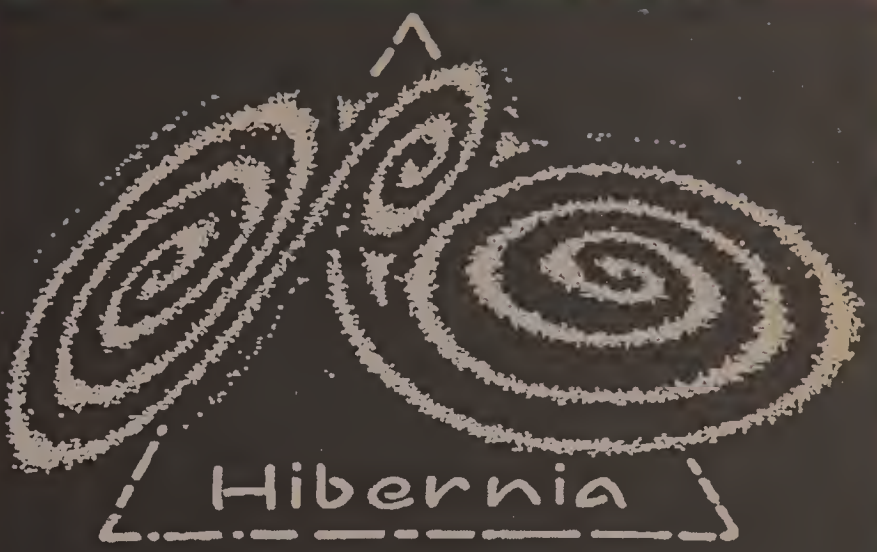
RAW?



Yeah, we can do raw.

At Tatsukichi, we make Boston's most authentic sushi. (Sashimi, too.) So we know fish. Raw fish. Try it in one of our famous Tatami Rooms. You like it like that. Raw.

And You Thought Bill Was Funny

No, Kate Clinton isn't related to America's favorite buffoon—in fact, she'd probably be one of the few that our comic character of a president wouldn't proposition. The country's favorite lesbian comic, who proved that feminists really can be funny, roars into town on February 13 at 8 pm. Her rollicking routine explores politics (not too tough these days), modern family relationships and her perspective on life as a lesbian. Billed (sorry) as "the lesbian you want to take home to your parents," tickets to her show are $16.50-19.50, call 496-2222. Funnier than White House antics? Now that's a plug. The Sanders Theater, 45 Quincy St., Cambridge.

Spears and Shields and Loincloths, Oh My

Primitive culture comes to the big city on February 22 courtesy of World Music. Black Umfolosi erupts onto the stage and performs a spirited, high-energy mix of traditional Zulu war dances and haunting mbube songs from southern Africa. From Bulawayo, the capital of the Ndebele-speaking region of Zimbabwe, Black Umfolosi presents a show of furious footwork and an a cappella singing style ranging from bright harmonies to soulful solos. Somerville Theatre, 55 Davis Sq., Somerville, 2 pm. Tickets $10-20, call 876-4275.

The Biggest Celebrity In The Hero Business

The perfect epic story weaves together the exploits of dastardly demons, vengeful gods, one-eyed hideous hags, gracious goddesses, winged warriors, titillating temptresses, a flying foal and, of course, a handsome hunk of a hero. Throw in some ice, celebrity voices (James Woods, Tate Donovan, Bobcat Goldthwait) and choreography by Emmy Award winner Sarah Kawahara, and you got yourself Disney on Ice—Hercules. More dramatic than Tanya Harding and Nancy Kerrigan in the same room, the skating spectacle takes place at the FleetCenter February 11-22. Tickets $12.50-22.50, call 931-2000.

★ Don't Bother
★★ Fair
★★★ Good

The Apostle ★★★★
Robert Duvall's compelling movie, which he wrote and directed as well as stars in, is bravely conflicted about its volatile Southern preacher protagonist. Yet it never suggests a superior point of view towards him or his Bible Belt world. Duvall records behavior from eye-level, accepting what he sees and hears as he shapes it into a narrative. The movie handles issues of religion and race with a refreshing directness. Miranda Richardson adds to her portfolio of vivid characterizations as the amusingly sparrow-like secretary that the preacher romances. Duvall also mines gold with nonprofessionals, especially the exuberant church ladies.

Blues Brothers 2000 ★
Pointless, life-sapping rehash of a property that was stretched from a sketch to a feature in the first place. Desperate excuses for comedy fill the gaps between cheesy (but not cheesy enough to be fun) song-and-dance numbers. Dan Aykroyd doesn't act, he strikes a pose. John Goodman's character is too mild for his talents. There's, ugh, a little boy (and strippers). Once Joe Morton is transformed into a Brother, he comes alive with comic energy and a great singing voice—except he's wasted for most of the movie as an exasperated cop. The all-star blues jams, if extracted, could make a nice VH-1 special.

Desperate Measures ★★
The usually dependable director Barbet Shroeder (Barfly) can't overcome a spotty script, even though he does infuse wickedness into Michael Keaton as a highly disciplined, amoral convict, and Andy Garcia as a cop who sinks to the killer's level of ruthless resourcefulness. What brings them together is that Garcia's son needs a bone marrow transplant and Keaton is the only suitable donor. Keaton agrees, and plots his escape from the hospital. Garcia has to catch him without killing him. The movie keeps pulling back just when it starts to get good (the material demands John Woo-like extremes). The final act is filled with insults to our intelligence, such as a gratuitous car chase.

Fallen Angels ★★1/2
Not to be confused with the Denzel clunker Fallen. This is Hong Kong director Wong Kar-wai's companion piece to Chungking Express, made before Happy Together. Wong's exercises in abstraction, and minimal plotting, are pushed to their furthest extreme. The combination of a lack of psychological depth to the characters (hitman Leon Lai and his agent Michelle Reis), and the use of a fish-eye lens for the whole movie make this one rather a chore to sit through. The day is saved by the razzle-dazzle quirkiness, and poignance, of Takeshi Kaneshiro (Chungking's cop #1). Playing Feb. 20-26 at the Brattle Theatre. (Note: I was only able to see this movie on video before deadline; I'd bet it's more alluring on the big screen).

Replacement Killers:* Chow smoulders.

Four Days in September ★★★
Bruno Barreto, known for his sensual films during the 1970s Cinema Novo period in Brazil (Dona Flor and her Two Husbands), tackles a high-tension moment from his nation's past. In 1969, during the military dictatorship, a band of young radicals kidnapped the American ambassador in order to focus world attention on the repressive regime. Barreto succeeds in crafting an involving character study of many of the personalities involved in the action. Taking a skeptical view of the idealists' extremism, Barreto focuses chiefly as an intellectual caught up in the movement. Alan Arkin plays the ambassador. The film is briskly paced, enhanced by Stewart Copeland's jangly score that incorporates Brazilian percussion.

Ma Vie en Rose ★★★
There's both charm and grit in this fairy-tale-like French-language film from Belgium, by first-time feature director Alain Berliner. Georges du Fresne is utterly perfect in the lead as seven-year-old Ludovic, who is convinced that he's a girl trapped in the body of a boy. His family has just moved into a candy-colored suburb when Ludovic begins raising eyebrows by dressing up in his mother's clothes and announcing that he wants to marry his pal Jerome. The movie enters Ludo's fantasy world, centered around a Barbie-like doll named Pam (there are dreamy computer-animated scenes), but it also trenchantly handles serious issues of gender identity and parenting. Ludo's parents (subtly played by Michele LaRoque and Jean-Pierre Escoffey) cope differently as they realize that Ludo's firmly held conviction is not just a phase.

Ma Vie:* Gender issues.

The Replacement Killers ★★★
The debut Hollywood vehicle for Hong Kong star Chow Yun-fat—John Woo's actor of choice—could be considered "The Killer" Comes to America. Chow plays a hitman who refuses to pull the trigger when a child is in the crosshairs. The big boss sends in terminator-like replacements to rub the repentent killer out and complete the hit. A forger gets mixed up in the mayhem and becomes Chow's ally (Mira Sorvino commits admirably to her Femme Nikita toughie). Music video director Antoine Fuqua, making his feature debut, provides hothouse-lush visuals and cleverly uses music to cue mood. But Chow, the Sexiest Man in the Universe, doesn't even get to crack a smile. He smolders effectively as the efficient but reluctant killer, and wields guns with Astaire-like grace, but here's hoping he gets to show more range of personality in his next few American pictures.

Spice World ★
The most uptight movie about fun ever made. What should have been a confection, if artificially sweetened, about the pop group Spice Girls fails to follow any of the rules of comedy (punchlines, anyone?) yet doesn't blaze trails of its own. It goes the lazy route, defensively deconstructing itself at every turn, hoping we'll neglect to form any opinions. Only funny bit: Stephen Fry as a judge. There's no joy here.

Tastings

That old adage—the way to a person's heart is through their stomach—rings as true as your love this month. Sweeties can keep warm and create love handles together in February by anointing their passion in chocolate. As if lusty lovers need an aphrodisiac.

Rum and Cigars

Talk about sin city. On February 19, Chez Henri presents a truly decadent evening of "Rum, Cigars and Chocolate." Enjoy aged Caribbean rums (like Whitehall, Barbancourt and St. James), fine tobacco from Honduras and Ecuador and the exotic taste of Venezuelan El Ray chocolate at 9 pm. Cost is $30 per person and seating is limited to the first 30 who call 354-8980. Don't tell your doctor.

Chocolate Decadence

In case your love didn't give the requisite box of chocolates, Turner Fisheries offers "A Chocolate Lover's Delight" on February 13 & 14. You don't need to wait for dessert—it's actually an entire dinner of chocolate, including such specialties as lobster with chocolate mint, pan fried oysters with a chocolate martini vinaigrette and monkfish with a cocoa glaze. Following your sugar buzz, guests are invited to Turner's Jazz Lounge to listen to the Debra Mann Trio. Reservations must be made in advance.

Romantic Weekend

There's romance in the air at the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel during the Engaging Weekend. Sweethearts are welcome to enjoy a luxurious suite stocked with champagne, chocolates from de Medici Chocolatier and flowers from Winston's. Lovers then enjoy an elegant dinner at the Oak Room followed by a chauffeured town car for a night in the city. After a romantic drive, the Fairmont can arrange for a diamond engagement ring or another piece of exquisite jewelry to be waiting in your room. The next morning, guests enjoy breakfast in bed, pamper themselves with a day of beauty at the Spa at Daryl Christopher followed by a shopping spree at Neiman Marcus. For $9,995, even the most uncreative chap can seem the Don Juan for a night.

Whacky Jacky

Chef Jacky Robert brings one of the most outrageously imaginative menus to The Dining Room at Maison Robert. With the world as his grocer, the most recent specialty is Loin of Smoked Antelope with kamut and black barley, shipped straight from a ranch in Texas (hey, don't knock it, Antelope meat has one-eighth the fat of beef). February 12 features a Champagne Dinner in The Dining Room for $85 and February 13 & 14 loves a Prix Fixe Valentine's Day Menu of four courses for $100 per person (and you don't have to have the antelope).

Classes That Cook

The Westin Copley Place offers a package that lets you learn from the pros. Check in on a Saturday night and then enjoy a lesson on the latest techniques of the culinary trade from its chefs and other industry experts. February 21 features Westin pastry chef Andreas Horava presenting a Viennese dessert demonstration, 10:30 am-noon. The demonstration takes place at Williams Sonoma followed by a brunch at Turner Fisheries. The price for the package is $189/double occupancy.

Tastings

of Wine Seminars & Events. Master sommelier Harold Toussaint brings his mobile wine academy to the American Royal Room at 6 pm to enchant guests with his vast vino knowledge. Guests will taste his selections, accompanied by cheese and fruits. February 23 features "Affordable Red Burgundies" for $55 per person (Looks like the emphasis is on red burgundies, not affordable).

Recipe Festival

Boston Park Plaza Hotel has whipped up a dozen zesty weekends featuring international cooking demonstrations by famous Boston chefs for The Great Recipe Festival. Chefs and celebrities will share secrets and stories and feed patrons their specialties through March 29. The near future will entertain Peter J. Patchett of the Algonquin Club on February 14, and Jim Dodge and Arlene Romney from the Museum of Fine Arts on February 21.

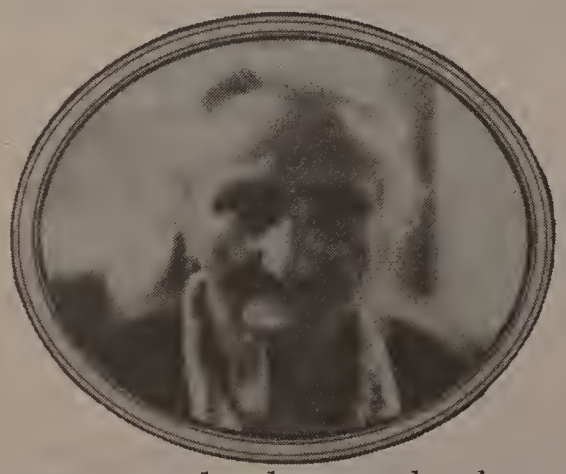
Tea and Tunes

Afternoon tea at the Bristol Lounge of the Four Seasons Hotel will get a little livelier this month with the addition of the Harvard Krokodiles. Slug back tea (blow first) to the tunes of Harvard University's oldest a cappella singing group the first Saturday of every month from January through May and September through December from 3:30-4 pm.

Champagne and Caviar

Kicking off 1998 with style, Plaza III • The Kansas City Steakhouse in the heart of Faneuil Hall introduces a Champagne, Oyster & American Caviar Bar. A selection of moderately-priced American "methode champenoise" sparkling wines and "grand marque" French champagnes by-the-glass will be served, accompanied by an appealing array of appetizers from across North America, including freshly shucked oysters on the half-shell, sturgeon caviar, golden caviar, oysters Rockefeller and Nova Scotia smoked salmon.

Theater Food



To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Euro

Forget Seth Greenberg's haunts for the hottest Euro scene—hit Turner Fisheries at the Westin Copley Place Boston instead with its EuroCuisine '98. Chef David Filippetti takes you on a culinary excursion spiced with European Michelin guest chef visits, cookbook signings and wine tastings. Menu specials will be paired with wines from Laboure-Roi and Chateau Lynch. Don't miss the Pan Seared Scallops Pancetta, and don't forget to stick your pinkie out ever so delicately while sipping your wine.

Chocoholics

Add to your waistline for a great cause. All winter Grill 23 on Berkeley Street serves a Chocolate Sampler Plate, consisting of several unique chocolate desserts created by pastry chef Judy Mattera, to benefit Share Our Strength. Two chocoholics can feast fabulously on the $20 house-made truffles, mousse, custard, cookies and cakes, with $5 to charity.

CROWN ELECTRIC FOOD

Hey Pookie!!
You are my golden-hearted sweetheart, best friend, hotter than a toddy, X-Files and chicken wings buddy and so much more. I'm so happy I hardly know what to do with myself—is it illegal to enjoy life this much? You have opened my eyes and inspired me, you have given new meaning to things I already knew. You can count on it—I'm in this for the long run. Thank you for finding me, my love.
YOURS ALWAYS, BUG

Gorgeous
To the gorgeous Ken doll who works at the coffee shop on the corner of Gloucester and Newbury Streets—I work next door at the $9.95 hair salon. Every morning I come in to get a soda and to see your fabulous smile. I'm really shy and don't know your preference, but I thought that you'd want to know that you flatter me with your genuine authenticity. You also have the most gorgeous legs I've ever seen, especially in those adorable shorts you always wear. Thanks for your warmth and gentle spirit. And also for always remembering my name.

Greedy
What Are You Gonna Do With 200+ N64 Games?! Okay, I noticed Lechmere in the Cambridgeside Galleria was going out of business and was selling all its N64 games CHEAP. So I decided to head back to pick one up, but the salesperson told me that someone came in and BOUGHT THEM ALL. Whoever you are: what the hell are you doing? Are you gonna sell them at jacked-up prices somewhere else? What gives?

All I want to do is stay home and rub your belly, and other parts.... Another headache comes on, can I get my medicine tonight? Hope school is going good, there's always Alaska!! Love ya until the stars fall into the sea!!
PRINCESS

To the Short Drunken Punk at Harpers Ferry
A lesser man would have just knocked you out for randomly kicking people. But I found you amusing—that's why I moved in front of you. Had you been as big and strong as you thought you were, perhaps the stool you threw at me would have actually reached. But you're not and it didn't! I'll bet that you're chums with the thugs who popped my gals balloons on her birthday! You and other purveyors of Bad Vibes do not belong at Slipknot! Shows they're not your bag.
MARTY

To the Hunky Grease Monkey in Dorchester
Please, let's stop this cat and mouse game. Are you interested or not? Ever since you told me you were single and your place is immaculate, I've been curious about you. I drive a lot more in order to see you, to chat. We've both flirted but the time is past. Honey, you rev my engine. I'd love to see the pecs and abs you're working hard on. Please contact me here or the next time you see me at the pump. I no longer work at Big K.

Rockie HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

FEBRUARY 11 - FEBRUARY 24, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

In the works: advancing your career, figuring out how you fit in with your peers and maybe a little soul-searching about your relationship to the cosmos. This week, think Einstein, and maybe one day you too will get a billboard. Or think Gandhi, since so many planets are in your 11th house, the one that shows your love of humanity. Sorry, but there's not enough planetary activity in your romance sector to warrant a hot forecast for Valentine's Day. If you want more action, pay more attention to a Libra in your life.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

The weekend starts you off in a lovely, loving mode as the moon trines your Venus ruler Friday morning, but by Sunday night, you may have had your fill of people, events and "talk to me, tell me what you want." What I think you want is a ticket out of wherever you happen to be. Since nothing is quite congealing, you might as well look for greener pastures by surfing the Net or scoping the slopes. But if you're doing a special Valentine's Day thing, plan the high point for Friday night or Saturday morning.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Not everything follows my timetable. It may take a few days until the experienced adventure-seekers (Saturn in Aries sextiling your Mercury ruler) confirm that you're as bright and trend-setting as we think you are. Until you hear something tangible, all you have to spur you on this week is a slew of mood changes that are best handled if you're on the road, on the phone, on the Net. Movement is essential as is maintaining contact with acquaintances and associates around the globe. As for Valentine's Day, eh. Next weekend is much better, you're much more blessed.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Keep in mind that you react far longer and stronger to your moon ruler's waxing and waning than other signs do. So when you look up in the sky and see the Leo-Aquarius full moon, try to keep yourself from slipping into one of those long moody lunar snits of yours. Friday's Virgo moon may demand excellence from you, but don't you dare ask significant others to toe the line as well. All that Aquarian energy in your house of partners is encouraging them to be independent, rebellious or downright ornery. Adjust your approach accordingly.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Valentine's Day was made for you this year. No other sign has so many planets in your houses of significant others—your co-workers, partners and mates. And while there's not much interaction among them, they seem to be emitting vibes intended to draw you into their webs. The only question is, with more than one offer, with whom will you choose to spend the holiday? You could always do a brunch here, a dinner there and placate all comers. Think of it as marking time until you see what lucky break develops after your sun ruler enters Pisces and meets beneficent Jupiter.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Fighting? Don't lay the blame on your picky personality, but on the fact that militant Mars is passing through your Pisces house of partners. While the god of war is in that position (or condition) you should take advantage of his heat, friction and persistence to get what you desire. Under these circumstances, you just may end up having a sexy St. Valentine's Day, and if you are a bit nicer to a loved one, the occasion could turn quite romantic, too. But the big benefits come next weekend. Patience.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

We all know how important St. Valentine's Day is to the sign that lives by alliances, but while strict Saturn is in your Aries house of partners, you can't get no satisfaction. Whatever your partner does to please you won't be enough. It's a bitch, but you can lessen your frustration by making your house and garden more attractive or by having a few friends around. There's a strong signal from your area of entertainment urging you to play, party, take in a play or put on a show.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

In a week when not much is happening, you might get lucky simply because your Mars co-ruler is in the poetic sign of Pisces. Despite your true (or base) intentions, you could be giving off gentle, romantic vibes—the irresistible call of the siren the sailor can't help but succumb to. Now, all you need is someone naughty and nautical. Check out the local talent because there's energy (and people) in the neighborhood who can expose you to new experiences and take you to interesting places.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Are you killing time or waiting for your ship to come in? That probably won't happen until the sun joins your Jupiter ruler in Pisces on February 23. However, you could hear something this weekend that enhances your reputation. Try to be friendlier with the folks in the neighborhood, and if given an opportunity to talk with a sibling, take it. This is also an excellent time (Venus in Capricorn, Neptune and Uranus in early Aquarius, all in your money house) to acquire art or something else that's rare and beautiful.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

You just might be that rare and beautiful thing the Sagittarius is looking for. While Venus, Goddess of Love and Beauty, in your sign is drawing attention to your appearance and your personality, there's not much you can do except make yourself more attractive than you already are. This would be a good week to have that makeover you meant to give yourself as a birthday present, buy some clothes, soak in a spa. Self-indulgence is a good thing...when it serves a purpose, said the Goat. Next week: profits.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

What occurs as a result of today's (Wednesday's) Leo-Aquarius full moon could be the main astrological influence on you all week. And because a romantic Libra moon this weekend favors everything airy and Aquarian, there'll be a reconciliation if one is needed, plus gratuitous hugs and kisses, whether you want them or not. However, it's your interior life and personal preferences that are calling for (god forbid I use "demanding") your attention. Tell him/her I say it's OK if you're self-involved on Valentine's Day.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Intention is everything. You don't have to do much this holiday weekend, you just have to say the right thing and mean what you say. Somehow a simple gesture could have a tremendously romantic effect on the object of your affections. Or if you don't trust your own expression, then resort to chocolates and champagne like the rest of us. By midweek you'll feel the flow of goodness coming right back at you, and whether or not you want a reward, you're due to receive sizable benefits from generous Jupiter in your sign.

Is your present relationship worth pursuing? Order a compatibility report for Valentine's Day and learn if it's love, infatuation or simply sex. Send date, time and place of birth for both parties, plus a check for $20, to Rockie Gardiner, 7985 Santa Monica BLVD., #541, West Hollywood, CA 90046 http: www.rockiehoroscope.com

TELL ME WHY I SHOULD LIKE MONDAYS...

The weekend's over, and the work week's begun. Feel like opening a vein?

Well, before doing anything rash, you might try heading over to G-Lounge for "Your Sister's House" — a weekly freak-show hosted by Janet "Auntie Chianti" Warner (of Club Nicole notoriety) and infamous drink-slingers George Makas and Michel Crump, whose shenanigans have begun to attract the city's so-hip-it-hurts crowd on Monday nights.

Spotted there recently were none other than club-hopping heartthrob Joe Volpicelli and Seth Greenberg's gorgeous Girl Friday, Sara Wilkins, the two Alexes — Durso and Clark — with the latter's lovely sister, Tiffany, tall drink of water Christopher Ellsworth, Team Fabulous captain Alexander Hoffmann, whirling PR dervish Kate Shamon and owner Jim Hamelburg, among others.

While John Waters movies played on the VCR, a group of pretty boys monopolized the pool table and everyone else sprawled out on the sofas, looking, for all the world, like an advertisement for muscle relaxants.

AVEZ-VOUS DISH?

Dirt? A Spectacular Social Occasion? Call J.S. at 859-1400 ext. 303

By the time everyone headed home, it was well into the wee hours, and there was barely enough time to pop a few Advil and take a brief nap before waking up to face Tuesday.

GRAPE EXPECTATIONS...

Public television is famous for whines — "Send in your pledge, so that we can continue to bring you The Wonderful World of Pond Scum," and "Without your $10, the FCC will repossess our broadcasting tower on Tuesday."

Infinitely more pleasant, however, was WGBH's Rare and Fine Wine Auction, held at the Boston Harbor Hotel, which attracted such sophisticated oenephiles and eminent winos as the startlingly handsome Daniel Roy of E&J Gallo and his beguiling wife, Kelly, who works for Long's jewelers, blushing newlywed Vanya Tulenko, attorney-about-town Barry Chait, the dazzling Danette Stephens (who does something or other for Harvard), eminent eye doctor Macie Finkelstein, and foodie extraordinaire Jim Carmody (aVP at the New England Medical Center and a supporter of the Spinazzola Gala).

This year's auction reaped a record $70,000, thanks in no small part to Armani poster child Janet Goff, who bid on and won three lots of exceptional Burgundies, and who enthused, "This is just like being in a James Bond movie, except that I haven't met any women whose names are gynecological puns."

IT'S THE THOUGHT THAT COUNTS...

Faithful readers of this column will recall that before Christmas, Back Bay dowager empress Smoki Bacon hosted a party at which a fire broke out in her drawing room.

At a surprise 70th birthday party thrown for her by her daughter and son-in-law, Hilary and Christopher Gabrieli, at their incredibly elegant Louisburg Square townhouse, a long line of distinguished guests arrived bearing presents, among them: blonde Brahmin Ann Sargent, notorious raconteur Rodman Lincoln, kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman and the bubbly Barbara Brilliant.

The most amusing gift, however, came from Tab society scribbler Tom Witkowski, who arrived carrying what looked like a bottle of wine but turned out, upon closer inspection, to be a fire extinguisher.

IT WAS CHEAPER THAN A ROUND-TRIP TICKET ON ALITALIA...

Who Was That Masked Man?

Well, it could have been Beacon Hill denizens Ranch Kimball, Bill French or Sam Atkinson. Or publishing playboy Mark Childs, blue-blooded barbarian Conan French, dry cleaning king Rich Pellagrini, or even Cape Cod bad-boy Liam Monaghan, who was accompanied by his way-cool sister, Imelda.

Then again, it might have been the fetching Eleanor de Ropp, stunning blonde producer Nicole Daniel (squired by her spouse, Bear Stearns VP David Catalfimo), the beguiling Sharon Glew, latter day flapper Christianne Hanna of Chanel, or Mary "Me llamo esta Fiesta" English.

All of them were swirling around the Ritz ballroom for the Beacon Hill Civic Association's masquerade ball, An Evening in Venice.

While some people arrived wearing their own elaborate masks, a veritable arts and crafts studio was set up downstairs, where guests could make their own, although, in truth, most of the partygoers decided to forgo disguises.

"Why the hell should I wear a mask?" said one woman indignantly. "I just spent an hour putting on makeup."

GOOD THING JENNY CRAIG WASN'T INVITED...

Just in time to blow everybody's New Year's resolutions, restaurateur Debbie Lewis and chef Jim Casey hosted a nine-course feast at 29 Newbury Street to benefit the Art Institute of Boston.

On hand were legendary French chef Jacques Pepin and his daughter, Claudine (honorary chairs of this year's Edible Art fundraiser), Zagat factotum Jane Levine and her other half, Chaz, uber-lawyers Joel and Matthew Kozol, Art Institute president Stan Trecker, art collectors Sandy and David Bakalar, writer and equestrienne Bobbie Mudge, and one guest who got as far as the cheese course before groaning, "I feel like a bloated tick. I think my thighs are gonna sue for cruel and unusual punishment." ✦

You Should See What We Do for the Liquor Advertisers

Any thin line between advertising and editorial at THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN went up in smoke with Gretchen Voss' oh-so-hip "article" extolling the virtues of second-hand cancer ("City Haul," January 14 issue). "We Bostonians should take great pride in our smokeful city—and laugh uproariously at the surfer slackers and silicone bimbettes in California who have to leave the bar to light up," Voss begins. Yeah...major inconvenience all right, Gretch. Philip Morris and R.J. Reynolds couldn't have said it better if they paid for it (as they did with full page ads for Kamel, Parliament and Winston in the same issue). Is THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's frequent "be cool, die young and leave a well-tanned corpse" editorializing on behalf of "smoker's rights" mere coincidence? I smell something improper.

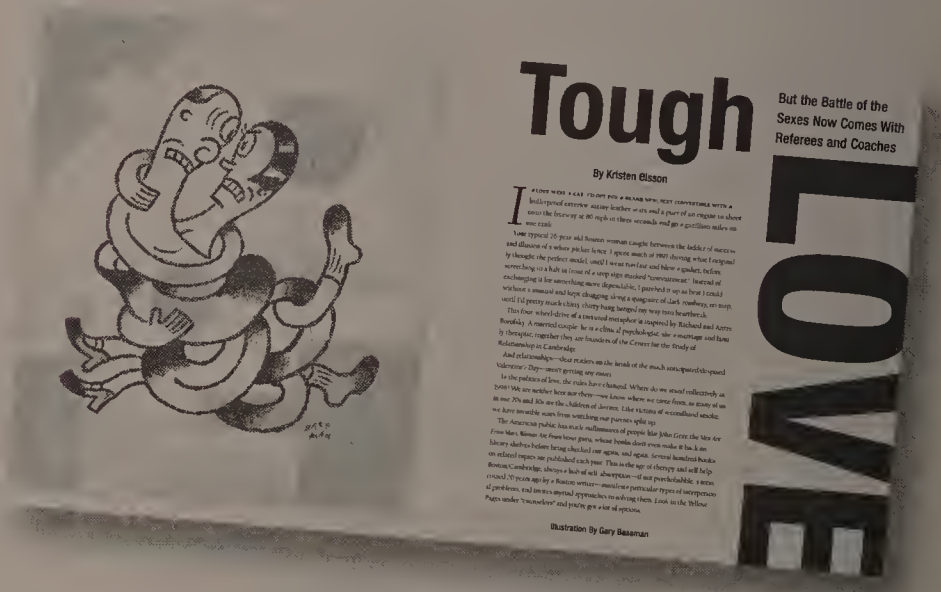
Well It Was a Good War



I'm writing this letter in reference to David Rosenbaum's review of Miss Saigon (January 28 issue). While discussing the controversy surrounding the original Boston run of the musical Miss Saigon in 1993, Mr. Rosenbaum writes the following: "Other people were upset because the musical...did not show the American war effort in the best light. And remember, too that 1993 was the year of the Gulf War—a good war we won as opposed to a bad war we lost." This potentially compelling observation is undermined by the fact that the Gulf War was fought in 1991, not 1993.

TOM GEHAN
Boston

Yeah, Yeah, Yeah....

At least one factual mistake with David Rosenbaum's review of Miss Saigon (January 28 issue). He writes: "...that 1993 was the year of the Gulf War..." Bzzz! Not quite. The campaigns known variously as the Gulf War, the Persian Gulf War and Desert Shield/Desert Storm were from 1990-91, not 1993. Think of President Bush saying "Saddam." I also thought it interesting that David would compare Miss Saigon to Les Miserables. Personally, I preferred it in the original Italian...as Puccini's Madame Butterfly.

Why Fools Fall in Love

I just finished reading your article on "Tough Love" (February 11 issue) and it kept making me madder and madder. An awful lot of people make an awful lot of money shelling out claptrap to poor fools who seem to believe that "love" should be either violins or firecrackers. Or both. Simultaneously. Your "experts" keep saying the same thing in different ways: That being in love should make you feel wonderful, all the time. But that's not the way life works, is it? Sometimes, caring so very much about someone else can make you feel miserable. Maybe because you have to sacrifice doing what you want; or because you feel you're giving more than you're getting. Or because your loved one is just a grouch or a schmuck on that given day. Sometimes you can go years feeling lousy, but "love" really does mean staying together for the family's sake, or staying together in hope that eventually you'll be able to make things better. But the bottom line remains that love is a process that often isn't lovely. If people faced this fact of life, it might put some "experts" out of business, but there'd be a lot more energy to spend on caring as opposed to complaining.

(Please don't publish my name because these thoughts are very personal. I may sound like I'm a bitter old pill, but I'm really a romantic—and very happily in love!)

Loosely Speaking

TALK ABOUT CHASING YOUR TAIL

The Boston Globe found itself in the ludicrous position last week of having to run a story following up a New York Daily News story about a Globe columnist's alleged leak that he was getting leaks from special prosecutor Kenneth Starr's office. If you got that, there's more: Not only were the Globe columnist's comments reportedly made at a journalism seminar—where, one presumes, participants are supposed to understand the meaning of "confidentiality"—but at a seminar in the Globe's backyard, Harvard.

Adding to the hilarity, when the Globe sought comment from the columnist, John Ellis, on his comment, he was unavailable for comment.

One thing the Globe didn't seem to think merited comment was that John Ellis is George Bush's nephew and first cousin to George Jr., who's mentioned as a presidential frontrunner by non other than another Globe columnist. Which would make it purty ironical, wouldn't it, if John Ellis's comment helped bring down Bill Clinton.

THE DEVIL'S IN THE DETAILS

Mashberg

Camera shutters gnashed, feasting on the sight of Ohio's Great Satan, Marilyn Manson, in town to sign copies of his frankly fascinating autobiography, The Long Road Out of Hell at the Burlington Newbury Comics last Tuesday. Atypically camera shy, the rocker whose stage name is from Marilyn Monroe and Charles Manson slouched like a reluctant lab rat before the throng of press and about 1,000 suburban Beelzebubs gathered to pay homage. When the cash registers stopped ringing, store managers were shaken to discover that the Beast Master of demonic rock 'n' roll had moved precisely 666 copies of his fevered tome.

Manson

THE STORY'S GOT LEGS

Boston Herald reporter (and sometime IMPROPER contributor) Tom Mashberg recently got a taste of the celebritude usually only accorded the people reporters write about, when his article on the Gardner Museum heist ran in Vanity Fair, complete with his byline on the cover. "Just below Madonna's left ear," as he puts it. "Yeah, I got calls from friends I hadn't seen since footie pajama days." Mashberg is negotiating to sell an option on his articles to 20th Century-Fox and says he would like to do a book about how he got a glimpse of what he believes are the stolen paintings. "But most publishers say, short of an ending, I don't see it as a book. Maybe Fox'll make up an ending."

MAYBE HE COULD TEAM UP WITH THE LORD OF THE DANCE

Since taking up his baton, cloyingly boyish Pops conductor Keith Lockhart has repeatedly made himself look foolish in photos—posing in running gear and the American flag for album covers and in a hideously ugly grunge outfit for a fashion shoot that appeared in New York magazine. We were beginning to wonder what he'd do to embarrass himself next, when the answer arrived with an advance copy of The Celtic Album. On the cover, he's dressed like a Scottish warrior—complete with leather breastplate, leather cuffs and tartan kilt—unconvincingly (and inexplicably) wielding a giant sword. To his credit, however, the maestro's shit-eating grin suggests that even he realizes just how ridiculous he looks.

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN

It happened quietly and without many of us knowing about it, but Boston has lost two of its coolest inhabitants. Wendy Stefanelli, former special events coordinator and catering manager for the Lyons Group, and Terry Ward, former C.O.O. of the Olive Group in Charlestown, were married in September in West Falmouth and have since moved to San Francisco. She's now working as an account coordinator at K-RON, the Bay Area NBC affiliate, and he's a managing partner for Real Restaurants, a chain based in San Francisco. Wedding presents can be forwarded accordingly.

NEW BOUTIQUE UNGER WAY

Jeff Unger, co-owner of Oskar's and partner in Biscuit Head Records in Boston, is teaming up with local artist Heather Ritchie to open the Heather Ritchie Boutique in the beginning of March. The loft-style boutique, which will feature '20s and '30s-style antiques, mixed with Ritchie's private collection of funky accoutrements, will be located, conveniently enough, right below Oskar's at 107 South St.

SLIPSLIDING AWAY

A rogue ice storm made driving and walking so dangerous on Februrary 5, the night of Brighton's Franciscan Children's Hospital fundraiser at the Westin, that organizers were afraid they'd be hosting a roomful of no-shows. In fact, some 500 people showed up for the event, which honored George Regan, Natalie Jacobson, state auditor Joe DeNucci and New Balance Shoe co-founder Anne Davis. Nonetheless, so many of the well-heeled actually fell, that when Jacobson failed to show at the appointed time, concern rose that she might have been injured. Eventually, she arrived, in one piece, but with husband Chet Curtis—on crutches. "All I could think of," said one of the sponsors, "was that Chet had slipped and they were late because they had to go to the emergency room first." Nope, just hip replacement surgery.

Splash features fanciful bathroom fixtures.

Starck Raving Sinks

Splash, at 244 Needham St. in Newton, has bathroom fixtures with a fanciness you may not realize exists. Call 332-6662.

No prosaic porcelain here. Splash is a place that will make you wish you were an upper-class compulsive handwasher, a place where designers, indeed even architects like Philippe Starck, have completely reconceived that necessity—the bathroom sink. Some sink bowls are made of glass, and it's no exaggeration to compare a few to Lalique cut-glass bowls. An Italian line of the sinks is splashed with an expressive, arty pattern—a soup of colorful moodiness like nothing you've ever seen in this context. The French basins have patterns resembling very fancy, delicate china plates, and the sink itself may be scalloped—one of them has a porcelain pedestal that billows like the hem of a thin lady's gown. Quite often, the sink is placed almost floating on a large rectangle of glass or may have a figured metal piece around it that hangs down like the edge of a metal tablecloth. A fancy inn on the Cape has ordered a fanciful sink that lights from within for the lobby ladies' room. And yet another charmer, by Starck, has a big base that resembles a large African drum. Even a relatively "standard" basin has legs that make it look like a big old country kitchen table. Your little child will love the one painted with Hey Diddle Diddle words and pictures. Many other highest-of-high-end bathroom adornments fill the showroom. People spend many, many thousands of dollars here, but it's also a paradise for the window shopper of exalted ablutionary dreams.

I See A Corner Office In The Air

"Psychic Entertainment" is occult-rich fun accessible to party guests, corporations, bar mitzvah boys and party kids. Call (781) 641-2100.

Emanating a combination of down-to-earth good sense and a belief that many mysterious elements come wingedly to bear on the course of our lives, Daphne and Diane sally forth doing business as "Psychic Entertainment." This they do at corporate and private parties of no fewer than 10 people. Using their own Tell A Fortune Tarot Pack that is, as they put it, "less medieval and more in the way of daily guidance," they do a quick reading for each willing guest, culminating in a helpful message. As they say, "We create our own reality by what we focus on," so too the message pitches the seeker toward a goal. It may get the party guest to pay attention to something that's missing but cries out to be pursued, or to something that's in oversupply and needs cooling down. Not surprisingly, given the corporate dimension, their tarovian findings and urgings often concern promotions and new projects at work. In the "mystical, magical" atmosphere they create, there can also be some balancing of auras, breathing exercises and Zodiac gift baskets ("metaphysical goodies"). Kids aged 10-13 have fun with this as a birthday party amusement.

Tarovian findings often concern work.

The Junior Tourist Roams Beantown

Here's a guidebook for children, Kidding Around Boston, by Helen Byers, that shows them the whole town.

Guidebooks are mostly aimed at grownups. After all, they're the ones with the car, the money and their hands on the agenda. This one, Kidding Around Boston, combines a digestible dollop of history, an enticing scoop of tourism and some games and puzzles after each section to keep them on that page of history for another few minutes. One page talks about the Old State House where the Declaration of Independence was first read from the balcony on July 18, 1776 ("The crowd went wild! They destroyed the lion and the unicorn, symbols of Great Britain") and on the facing page, to reinforce things, a fill-in-the-numbers coloring puzzle reveals that the nickname for British soldiers was, indeed, Redcoats. The Constitution, Paul Revere's House and, of course, the Freedom Trail and the Black Heritage Trail—and all the modern hands-on-eries like the hair-freaking electricity exhibit at the Museum of Science—get a mention. And it's done so each little section is pithy enough, and fun enough, so kids will want their parents to take them on their outings, and not just the other way around.

Kidding Around Boston keeps the kids amused.

Mohr and Mohr Furniture

Mohr & McPherson added its name to the plethora of furnishing retailers in the Back Bay—including Laura Ashley Home, Adesso, The Morson Collection, Repertoire, Domain and Amen Wardy Home—on February 14 with the opening of its fourth store located at 81 Arlington St. The furniture importer brings to "Boston's Soho" a home furnishings emporium specializing in hand-crafted rugs, luxury bed linens and antiques and exotic furniture from China, India, Japan, Morocco and Indonesia. In appreciation of the artistry and skill used by craftsmen around the world for Mohr & McPherson's furnishings, the store gives a percentage of its sales to the WWF's Lorentz National Park Project in Indonesia.

Godzagat—Where To Eat?

According to the new Zagat Survey for 1998 (Zagat Survey, LLC, New York, N.Y.), when it comes to dining, Beantown is Boomtown. The guide covered 821 restaurants (25 percent more than the last survey two years ago) and discovered a trend unique to Boston—the average per-person cost of a meal actually fell a smidgeon since the last survey. The editors stress that dining as theater has made a comeback in Boston and cite Mistral and Restaurant Zinc as examples. New Asian restaurants such as Jae's Cafe & Grill and Panda Leaf are making a splash while Matt Murphy's Pub and The Burren lead a resurgence of the Irish Pub. Despite hot newcomers, Aujourd'hui repeated as top-ranked for food and won its second consecutive triple crown for food, decor and service and Olives received the title of Boston's most popular restaurant.

Count Down to the Millennium

Do you know how many days are left 'til the biggest day in, well, 1,000 years? No pressure there. Since that fateful chiming of the clock at midnight will either mean the end of the world, the end of your computer, the onslaught of your biggest hangover and/or the most poignant kiss of your life, you should at least know how much time you have left to prepare. Introducing the CountDown wall clock, available exclusively from Branco International. Available in two different styles, both depicting the sun, moon and earth as symbols of time, the clock displays a digital read-out of the hours, minutes and seconds until the year 2000. For all you time-obsessed neurotics out there, the clock can also be set to count down to any other target date, like a birthday, wedding or day you'll start that diet. The clock costs $69.95 plus shipping and handling, call (800) 528-7445 or (516) 544-4604. Bet Leif Ericsson didn't have one of these.

Your choice—glamorous music biz celebrities or incredibly wealthy West Coast diodes. CBS presents the 40th Annual Grammy Awards (Feb. 25, 8 pm, Channel 4) live from Radio City Music Hall in New York City. Look out for local musician Paula Cole who's nominated for Record of the Year, Song of the Year and Best New Artist of the Year. True groupies can follow up with interviews and schmoozing on Grammy Awards Post-Show '98 (Feb. 25, midnight, E!).

ANOTHER REVENGE OF THE NERDS: WENH rebroadcasts the excellent 1996 documentary Triumph of the Nerds: The Rise of Accidental Empires in Silicon Valley (Feb. 25, 8 pm, Channel 11). Hosted by author Robert Cringely, Nerds traces the incredible rise of the personal computer industry from California garages to corporate battlefields. All the big names are here—Apple, IBM, Microsoft, Hewlett Packard, Xerox, etc. Includes interviews with Apple's Steve Jobs and Microsoft's Harvard-dropout-turns-gazillionaire-owner Bill Gates.

HONEY, CAN I BE ON YOUR SHOW?: Cameos galore on Ellen. On Wednesday (Feb. 25, 9:30 pm, Channel 5), Harvey Fierstein guest-stars as himself while Spence (Jeremy Pivan) hallucinates himself into a dream sequence after sniffing bug spray. Next week (March 4, 9:30 pm, Channel 5), Ellen DeGeneres' real-life love, Anne Heche, makes her first appearance on the show.

IT'S A SHAFT-ACULAR: TNT is running a trilogy of Shaft movies Friday night. First up, 1971's Shaft (Feb. 27, 11 pm, TNT), starring Richard Roundtree as the badass New York City detective out to find the kidnapped daughter of a drug kingpin while Issac Hayes sings his praises. In the 1972 sequel, Shaft's Big Score! (Feb. 28, 1:05 am, TNT), Roundtree returns to find the killer of a friend. That's followed by 1973's Shaft in Africa (Feb. 28, 3:05 am, TNT). In this outing, Shaft crosses the Atlantic to investigate modern-day slave trading.

Beauty & TRUTH

Tips Off The Old Block

And now, some tips the testers and I have been dying to share with you:

Reality check: Very few people need a facial toner or those expensive skin fresheners. If you are using a proper facial cleanser that rinses off without leaving a sticky residue behind, then you're all set. But, for you oily boids out there, nothing cuts the grease and freshens the skin better than the Good Witch of the Beauty Booth: Witch Hazel. Just brush a hazel-soaked cotton ball over your pretty puss to rejuvenate your tired mug, without drying the skin like so many toners do. Witch hazel is also a perfect after shave. Buy this fragrance-free tester's favorite for under two bucks at any supermarket or drugstore.

My steady readers know that when I want to get down, down to the ground, I reach for that sweet white powder: baking soda. I buy my bicarb by the case load. Do like the testers and I do: add half a cup of the old Arm and Hammer to your bath to soften the water, or supplement your deodorant by throwing some under your pits and letting it sit while you shower. Rinse well and dig your fresh aroma. Try this trick on days when you're extra stinky due to stress, having your period, or when the flu has got you reeking of boiled onions. I also hear you can use this stuff in cooking....

Chin exercises? I laughed when one of my most beautiful testers insisted it wasn't lipo that tightened her chin skin. But the giggles stopped when the testers and I tried her trick and were wowed by the results. Start this wattle-trimming routine by facing straight up at the ceiling. Now stick your tongue out, as if you were Gene Simmons, French KISS-ing the clouds. You really feel your neck muscles tighten. Continue this snake imitation for a minute or two a couple times a day or while you're rinsing out your shampoo in the shower.

Sporting the same makeup style since Madonna was a virgin? Here are some tips to get you out of a makeup rut without looking laughably trendy:

✢ If you apply your eye shadow with brush or sponge-tip applicators, try using your fingertips instead. This softens a look instantly and saves time. Also try this trick with your lipstick for a more natural, bitten-lip look.

✢ Please, girls: Let's all keep in mind that when it comes to lipstick the important thing isn't color, but to accept your mouth's final word on where your lips end. Stay within your lip line and avoid that Pamela Anderson, cartoonish kisser.

✢ Marilyn Monroe had the simplest, most effective way of adding height and dimension to her eyelids. She used her blush on the upper outer corner of her lids for defined eyes that didn't look made up.

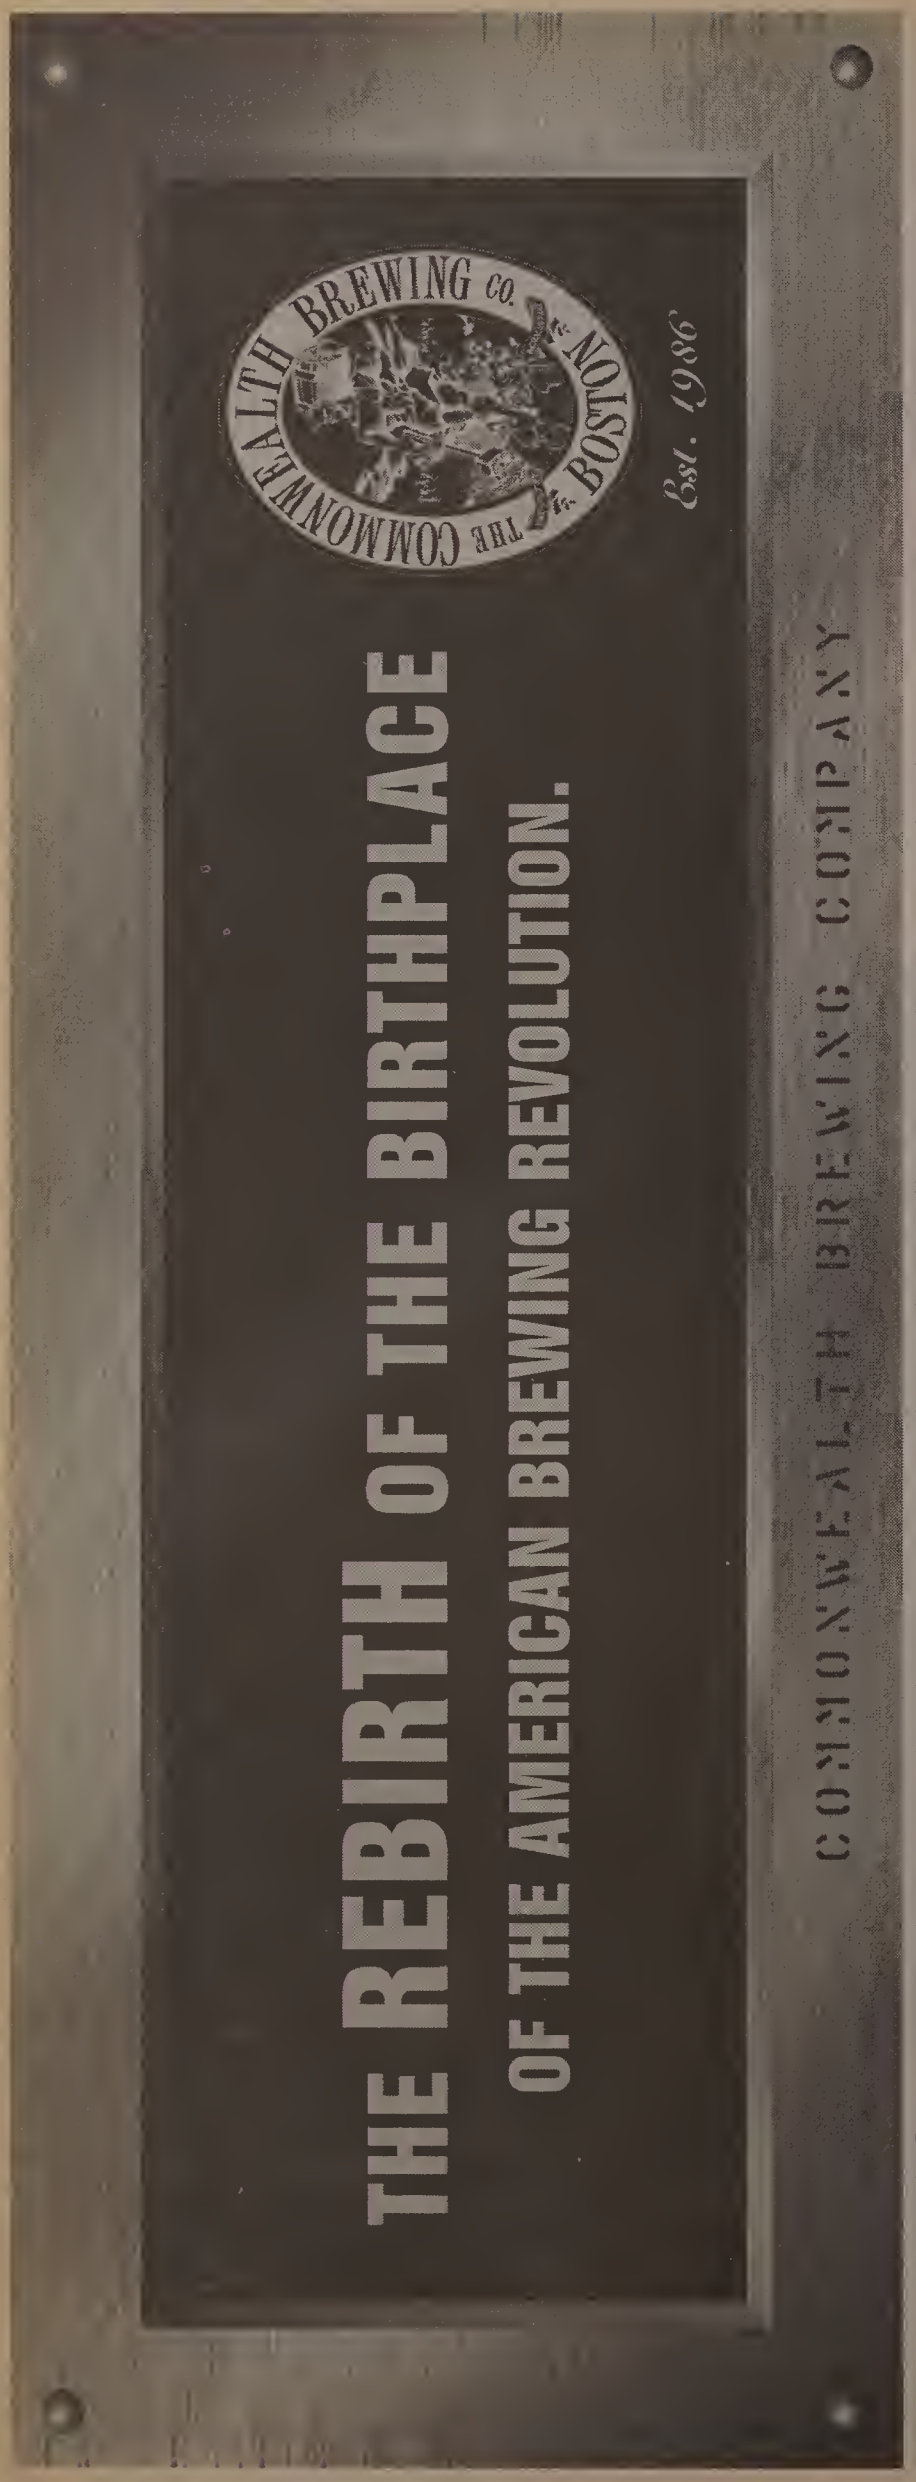
Keep in mind that you and your wallet are nobody's beauty slave. Taking charge of your grooming is not only a way a taking care of yourself, it is another way to express who you are and who you want to be by living it every day. Have fun, keep it simple and admire your badass self. I look forward to your calls!

What's Noodle, Pussycat?

Tips, techniques and beauty advice for every pasta packin' pretty in the joint! But first, this update:

Beauty & Truth is a consumer advocate's guide of things to buy and try. And, since every Ralph Nader on acid needs her posse, I created a testing panel. Over the past eight years, more than 80 men and women of all ages and from all walks of life, have let me pick their brains about their beauty needs and grooming experiences. Then I slip them boxes of products to try out. Sometimes it takes several years of testing before I'm ready to draw conclusions from their experiments in loveliness. It may be slow, but I'm darned if I want my smartypants readers to be hornswoggled into purchasing some bogus product based on newfangled claims that we haven't questioned ourselves first.

I also peer at products through microscopes and interview doctors, estheticians, product developers and the FDA in search of the latest and greatest in beauty.



I write about beauty items that meet BOTH the testers and my approval. Life is too short to waste time or ink on trashing products that suck—and, believe me, there is plenty of cosmetic crap on our road to beauty heaven.

Now that the testers have spoken, it's your turn. Call me at the Improper at (617) 859-1400, extension 315, and leave a message about your fave products, a warning about your butcher barber, or a tip about a face cream that didn't work on your specific skin type. It's your page, doll: please help to keep it as beautiful as you are.

Vanessa Redgrave is Woolfe's Mrs. Dalloway.

MOVIES

Room to Enchant

By Betsy Sherman

Mrs. Dalloway finds visceral ways to ruminate on age, folly and wisdom

MRS. DALLOWAY IS A MOVIE OF gentle power. It settles inside you, swirls around and blossoms. The subject seems trivial—the reminiscences of an affluent woman in 1923 London, the day she throws a society party. Mrs. Clarissa Dalloway's present-day life is juxtaposed with tableaux from the summer of 1890, when at the country estate of her family, young Clarissa was at the zenith of her ripe beauty. The film freshly observes some enduring truths about the fire (and folly) of youth and the cool wisdom (and unfairness) of aging.

Vanessa Redgrave takes us inside the head of the wife of Richard Dalloway, member of Parliament. While outwardly confident, Mrs. Dalloway bristles with doubts about the choices she has made and the experiences that lie ahead. Natascha McElhone plays the willowy young Clarissa, center of a circle of admirers (McElhone's performance defines radiance). But there is another dimension added by author Virginia Woolf (her novel was adapted by Eileen Atkins)—the subplot concerning shell-shocked Great War veteran Septimus (Rupert Graves) and his wife Rezia (Amelia Bullmore) gashes through Clarissa's story. Although the society woman never meets the couple, Clarissa hears of Septimus's case history and is shaken by it.

While readying the townhouse for the soiree, Mrs. Dalloway says to her mild-mannered husband, "All I can do is give people one night when everything feels enchanted" and remind them "how good it is to be alive." Judging by her private thoughts, Clarissa herself needs reminding. The tiny bedroom to which she exiled herself during a recent illness reflects the draining of passion from her marriage. As she holds the glittering blue dress in which she will play hostess, the image dissolves to young Clarissa in a billowing white gown. The carefree girl of around 20 is a figurehead for the grace of the leisure class. She naturally draws the affections of those around her, which include Peter (Alan Cox), a young man full of plans to change the world. Clarissa shares an ardent relationship with Sally (Lena Headey), who is as much of a firebrand as Peter. But we know who will win out—when Dalloway enters the social circle, Peter murmurs "someone just walked over my grave."

On the day of the 1923 party, the older Peter (Michael Kitchen), now living in India, calls on Clarissa. Try as he might to casually recount the drama of his latest romance, Peter bubbles up with emotion in the presence of the love of his life. Peter crosses paths in Hyde Park with Septimus and Rezia. Septimus has been stricken with morbid flashbacks and suicidal impulses. A doctor, in stiff-upper-lip fashion, pronounces that he simply "lacks a sense of proportion" and should be put in a rest home. The shattered veteran, and the woman desperate to help him, share a tender scene in their flat before the cruel hand of authority intervenes. During her party, Clarissa ruminates on Septimus's fate (and we are reminded of Woolf's struggle with depression).

Director Marleen Gorris (Antonia's Line) finds visceral ways to complement Woolf's words. The 1890s scenes aren't cliché gauzy. Rather, they have a near-tangible physicality (especially liberating is how much Clarissa and Sally run, a no-no for Victorian girls). Eloquent editing makes the bridge across time resonate. In a flashback, Clarissa confesses to Peter that she fears he won't give her "room to breathe" if they marry. That memory is followed by a shot of the older Peter in his dark, wood-paneled hotel room. Then Richard is seen in a lighter, green-colored room with a window. That shot is followed by the older Clarissa in a room that is lighter still (Woolf's self-reliant room of one's own).

At the party, even the vivacious Sally makes a return, with a startling story. She and Peter reprise their youthful pastime of watching, criticizing and marveling at Clarissa. And we doubly revel in Clarissa-watching, thanks to Redgrave and McElhone. ✦

Roiff hotel hires chefs...Doyle leaves Back Bay Brewing... Exchange expands

While the opening of Paul Roiff and Seth Greenberg's new boutique hotel on Beacon Hill is several months away, they have already contracted with Ed Peterman and Robert Fathman to run the hotel's restaurant. Peterman and Fathman have been looking for a site to open an eatery for months. Previously, they were, respectively, sommelier and executive chef at Grill 23, with experience at Maison Robert, Clio and Formaggio Kitchen.

Ed Doyle has left his post at the Back Bay Brewing Company to become the chef at the restaurant in the new Seaport Hotel across from the World Trade Center.

In Central Square, a new restaurant has taken up residence in the space formerly occupied by Small Planet. KC's Peppercorn Grill is the latest from Spasso owner Kevin Mitchell. Mitchell and his partner in Porcini's restaurant, Joe O'Donnell, have set a casual theme with a slightly more upscale menu.

Gotta get a Growler.

Shuck off! The first annual Oyster Olympics are coming. Teams from Legal Sea Foods, Skipjack's, Cuttyhunk Shellfish and the East Coast Grill will compete to see who can pry open the most of the little buggers in the least amount of time. Chef Tim Partridge and his kitchen staff at the East Coast Grill will then be preparing the oysters 16 different ways for the hungry crowd, including po' boys, Rockefeller, barbecue and, of course, on the half shell.

Both Spike Lee and Natalie Cole recently made reservations at Clio but were no-shows. Cole's party sat for dinner, but the singer's plane couldn't land at Logan due to bad weather.

March 8 is Chocolate Fools Day at the Sheraton Commander in Cambridge. Several chocolatiers are competing in nine categories for kudos from the panel of celebrity judges (including yours truly). Some of the participants are Grill 23 & Bar, Christina's Homemade Ice Cream and Davio's. Proceeds from the day will benefit the Cambridge Performance Project.

The Exchange Restaurant and Cafe refurbished the vault of the old Shawmut bank and has transformed it into a private club that is due to open this week for membership. Privileges range from breakfast and concierge services to personal safety deposit boxes. Who knows what you would want to leave at a restaurant, but if the urge should strike, you know where to do it.

Everybody seems to be jumping on the jazz bandwagon. Oskar's, in the Leather District, is making it a theme for Saturday nights. Entitled "OZ," guests should wear ruby slippers for admittance—there's no place like Oskar's, there's no place like Oskar's. Except Hubbs on Huntington Avenue, which is also featuring jazz on Saturdays by the best local musicians.

As if we as a nation don't drink enough beer already, Boston Beer Works now offers the option of taking beer home in a bottle more befitting moonshine than anything else. The Growler is a 64-oz. behemoth, refillable at either Beer Works location. Also in the world of fermented drinks, Redhook's New England Nut Brown Ale hit the shelves February 9, bringing just a little more of the Seattle-based beer our way.

Even with Valentine's Day over, who needs an excuse to send fancy food baskets to a loved one? The Massachusetts Specialty Food Association, Inc., a non-profit organization, promotes the interests and products of food producers in the state. The MSFA uses these products to create bountiful treats. In addition, this organization hopes to increase public awareness of the Massachusetts food industry and the gourmet foods made right here in our fair commonwealth. ✦

Cheri Knight sings with melancholy grace.

MUSIC

Earthy Vocals

By Paul Robicheau

Cheri Knight's fusion of country, folk and rock is sown in the fields of New England

CHERI KNIGHT'S FLOWERS START growing in the greenhouse next month, long before they're cut and bunched for markets in Boston and Northampton later in the season. But there isn't such a predictable cycle for cultivating her songs.

"It's more of a feeling than anything else—I can feel when I'm ready to sit down and write," says Knight, who gathered a gorgeous bunch of songs on The Northeast Kingdom, a new CD straddling country, folk and rock with melancholy grace.

At times, the seeds of Knight's music are even sown in the fields—with familiar metaphors in "Black Eyed Susie" and "Rose in the Vine"—composed in her head on the farm.

"I'll just hum or sing," Knight explains from her home in Hatfield, a small town on the Connecticut River north of Northampton. "You come up with a pure melody without an instrument, 'cause I tend to play along [when I write], and especially if I'm on guitar, I tend to do the same things."

There's plenty of variety on the disc for Knight, who sings and plays bass—as she did in her last band, Boston's Blood Oranges, whose mandolinist Jimmy Ryan and guitarist Mark Spencer are among many special guests on The Northeast Kingdom. Ryan also is expected to join Knight's current band for a March 13 show at Cambridge's Lizard Lounge.

The Northeast Kingdom opens with the Celtic strains of hurdy-gurdy on "Dar Glasgow," only to weave from gnarly rocker "Black Eyed Susie" to the trad-country swing of "White Lies" and winsome charm of "All Blue." And Knight's earthy, unaffected vocals tie it all together.

"I don't think I sound exactly like anyone in particular, and that's pretty much the way I like it," Knight says. "I'm not looking to occupy the same little piece of ground Sarah McLachlan or whoever is on. I don't want their space. I want my own. And whether it gets a lot of attention or not is besides the point."

Nonetheless, The Northeast Kingdom is getting a lot of attention, even great reviews in Spin and People. But that might not have happened without the interest of renegade country artist Steve Earle, who heard Knight's overlooked solo debut The Knitter and wanted her to make an album for his label E-Squared. Not only did Earle produce the disc with Twangtrust partner Ray Kennedy, they both played on it—and got Emmylou Harris to co-sing "Crawling."

Like Earle, Knight prefers authentic country colors that don't easily translate to commercial success, but have gotten hipper since the Blood Oranges took that route.

"It's hard to say if something is hip or not across the board," Knight says. "There's a big difference between the art part and the commerce part, and my goals lie entirely in the art part of it. I'd like to make money, but what I get to do is make records the way that I want."

The Berkshires native also isn't about to move to Nashville any more than Boston. She finds the inspiration for her songs of sin, betrayal and loss right in the Pioneer Valley, from "The Hatfield Side" (about her town's rivalry with neighboring Hadley) to the haunting "The Northeast Kingdom," where she sings, "In these houses of stark white, we'd have you think that nothing ever happens."

"Small-town life has never been idyllic," Knight says. "It has always had a really dark, seedy, ugly side to it. And there's something incredibly repressed about New Englanders that I find infinitely fascinating."

And apart from music, there is farming in Hatfield, which offers its own therapy on occasion. "It was a great comfort to me to be out in the fields every day," Knight recalls of one high-pressure season when she was between record labels. "It was a great stress reliever in that the flowers were actually taking care of me." ✦

Back in the Race

By Tom Weisend

At long last, Reebok ads marry brain and techno-brawn

REEBOK AND GREAT ADVERTISING HAVE been like trains passing in the night for most of the company's history. "Reebok makes the process of doing great advertising impossible," said adman extraordinaire Martin Puris a month after his New York agency had won—then dumped—the Reebok account in 1987.

But that's changing. Reebok now has smaller ad agencies creating its campaigns and attempting to reconnect with the consumers that helped build the Stoughton company. A set of new TV commercials proves that the company has what Patti Labelle might call A New Attitude.

Perec takes flight.

But attitude is not a key ingredient for this new advertising. In the footwear world, as with fragrances and soft drinks, attitude is usually everything—the "Just Do It" school. Reebok and its agency, Heater Advertising in Boston, have, however, gotten back to the sneakers and what they do well. In the new work, technology reigns. No big slam dunks with Shaq, no rah-rah slogans, just product demonstrations that really turn your head.

The ads are wild, using a mix of the latest special effects, computer animation and live action to create a new world. In fact, the company had to buy a Cray Supercomputer to handle the demands of the animation it uses.

A set constructed in the Mohave Desert allows French track champion Marie Jose Perec appear to take flight, race through a visual time warp and dissolve into a flock of doves. The emphasis is on the performance of her 3D Ultralite footwear, with scenes demonstrating the lightness of the shoe. The segments are almost dream-like, edited together to give the 60-second spot a flow that makes it feel like it has gone by much faster.

One part of the commercial was actually shot with Perec simply running on a mirror to reflect her image. Computer graphics then build a set around her that looks sort of like the rib cage of some space beast, with a golden hue giving the shot a rare beauty. In another scene, she appears to sprout feathery wings that make the Victoria's Secret angels look like bargain-basement seconds. Yet another part involved a metallic "sky kite"—60 square feet of fabric blowing in the breeze as a backdrop.

An ad for the DMX brand called "Pod Harvest" is almost 100-percent computer generated. Starring former UCLA All American Alto Boldon, the commercial focuses on the DMX's new cushioning system. Boldon is shown as if at the start of a race, but then is transformed into a golden man, sort of a running Oscar statuette, as he achieves his speed. The pods from the soles of his Reeboks become a sort of life form of their own, surrounding him as he flies along.

The use of color in both of these ads is as compelling as the effects. Whereas many advertisers are relying on the now-hackneyed sepia and silver-toned black and white to convey their message, Reebok's spots get a huge lift from the use of somewhat odd colors.

The spots look like a million bucks (and probably cost more than that to produce). It's refreshing to see Reebok breaking new ground and using the TV medium so thoroughly. These are the type of commercials that will catch consumers' eyes and compel them to watch each time they come on screen. That's the job of advertising and its mission is wonderfully accomplished here. ✦

First-rate Chinese food in an ambience of pleasant decor.

DINING

So Much for So Little

By J. Charles Mokriski

Eat like an emperor at Chau Chow City in the financial district

FROM MY FIRST EXPOSURE TO CHINESE food at a restaurant named Blessings in the shadow of Yale College, I formed a rule of thumb for evaluating whether a Chinese restaurant offers the reasonable likelihood of dining well. The quality of the food will vary inversely with the attractiveness of the decor and the comfort of the surroundings. My first experience with Chinese cuisine in the Boston area confirmed the general validity of my rule, since I found a perfectly handsome restaurant where comfortable booths and chairs, cloth tablecloths and napkins, and tasteful wall coverings provided a venue for the most flavorless, characterless and textureless food I had ever experienced.

Like all generalizations, my rule admits exceptions. One clear exception is a relatively recent addition to the Boston dining scene, Chau Chow City, which purveys first-rate Chinese food in an ambience of reasonable comfort and pleasant decor. It's located on Essex Street, a full two blocks closer to the financial district than Chinatown proper, offering a convenient luncheon resource to downtown office workers. For evening visitors there is parking next door.

Entering the front door of Chau Chow City into a large, bright, cheery space, one is confronted by the world's second largest shark fin prominently displayed against a large round mirror framed in a ship's wheel. Red fabric walls and gold dragon sculptures co-exist with colorful neon lights, etched glass and what seem like miles of silk flowers festooning every nook and cranny. While the second floor dining room is less attractive than the first, with a low ceiling and a thicket of columns, it too is well appointed and comfortable.

Regular menu service at Chau Chow City is good but not spectacular. The fried dumplings ($5.95) were thick, doughy and undistinguished, but a large bowl of wonton soup ($2.95) was liberally studded with wontons, straw mushrooms and Chinese cabbage. The appetizer combo ($6.96) was terrific—succulent, boneless spareribs with a sweet honey glaze, crispy skinned chicken wings with an exotic, almost perfumed spicy flavor and spring rolls of the thinnest, most delicate wrapping. Half a roasted duck ($9) boasted moist, tender flesh, a rich brown sauce and the same wizardry with spices that blessed the chicken wings. House Special Chow Fun, broad rice noodles with small morsels of beef, tiny shrimp and Chinese vegetables ($5.50) was described on the menu as "dry fried," signifying preparation with less than the usual amount of oil. Son Charlie, a chow fun aficionado, pronounced it too dry and less to his liking than the chow fun offered by Chau Chow City's sister establishments run by the same family on Beach Street in Chinatown. The least successful main course at dinner was the Special Honey Glaze Walnut Jumbo Shrimp ($12.95). The hefty shrimp were of good crunchy texture, but they had an off-putting fishy flavor and a cloying sweetness.

If dinner at Chau Chow City is a hit or miss affair, dim sum lunch on the restaurant's second floor is uniformly enjoyable. Dim sum means, literally, little bits of the heart. It is offered only during the day, traditionally as an accompaniment to tea. Dozens of varied, diminutive tidbits are dispensed by enthusiastic waitresses wheeling carts piled with bamboo steamers and small tin casseroles, lifting covers to display their contents to eager, hungry patrons. A kaleidoscope of shapes, colors, tastes and textures beckon, and one orders by pointing to offerings that look most tempting. Three or four pieces constitute a serving, so it is essential to gather a foursome—even better a small crowd—for dim sum in order to expand the range of delicacies that can be sampled. Some choices are more than daunting—we have never been able to bring ourselves to sample the tripe or chicken feet. Except for these formidable exotica, we can honestly say we have seldom encountered a dim sum offering that was not a satisfying treat.

Recently, under the expert guidance of a knowledgeable colleague, we sampled 15 marvelous dishes. Standouts included meatballs of lean, finely ground pork wrapped in thin tofu; delicate dumplings of sweet lobster; plump sea scallops with glass noodles and scallions; exquisite spareribs, bony but extraordinarily flavorful, enlivened with chopped red peppers and a bold dose of garlic; dumplings of shrimp, pork and mushroom; lotus leaf wrapped sticky rice with small cylinders of sausage and morsels of pork and chicken; shrimp and pork shumai and pork, shrimp, and cilantro dumplings. Desserts were tiny, eggy custards in tender, flaky pastry with a subtle touch of sweetness. Jasmine tea, with its perfumed bouquet, accompanied this feast. After this extraordinary repast for five, the damages? Less than $9 per person. Never have so many eaten so well for so little. ✦

WINE

Bordeaux Beauties

By Sandy Block

Expert choices from the wonderful and rare top of the vine line

THE FAMOUS RED WINES OF BORDEAUX have increased so dramatically in price in the past few years that they're well beyond the reach of most consumers. Even new releases of the secondary wines are pushing $30 a bottle and older vintages have been nearly unobtainable for some time.

But Bordeaux is well worth knowing. Since it's the globe's largest fine wine district, with more than 9,000 properties accounting for approximately 10 percent of the world's total value, there are always a number of exciting wines to discover that are relatively unknown and undervalued.

Aaron Meshon

Harold Toussaint, the first American recipient of the master sommelier "Gold Medallion" title from SOPEXA, runs a series of tutored tastings on Monday evenings at Plaza III Kansas City Steakhouse in Faneuil Hall, where he is sommelier. The following are my notes, greatly informed by Toussaint's interpretations, from a recent Bordeaux tasting.

Listrac: Chateau Forcas-Loubaney, 1993. This wine has a flowery, gamey meat-like aroma with some light plummy fruit flavors and a smoky finish. It's somewhat tough and leathery as Litracs tend to be; not exactly a wine of finesse, but nuanced and interesting, with evolving flavors.

Moulis: Chateau Malmaison, 1993. Piney aromas, with scents of vegetable, white pepper and earth, this wine is more directly fruity in flavor than the above, with softer tannins. It's also less concentrated and substantial, with a short finish.

Margaux: Chateau Prieure-Lichine, 1994. A disappointment, given the wine's reputation. The fruit is thick and chocolatey, but tastes dull, lacking liveliness. Strangely heavy and out of balance.

St. Estephe: Chateau Phelan-Segur, 1993. Clearly marked by the vanilla scents of new oak barrels, this wine from the Medoc's northernmost commune shows a spicy black fruit character, with anise and olive undertones, and tasted strongly of Cabernet Sauvignon, as many St. Estephes do. Luscious texture, aristocratic flavors.

Paullic: Chateau Pichon Longueville-Baron, 1993. This wine is marked by volatile aromas and has a somewhat hard, stemmy flavor. The black, herbal, tealeaf-like fruit is interesting, but the wine's toughness makes it difficult to appreciate at this stage of its development.

St. Julien: Chateau Beychevelle, 1994. If this district produces wines that we expect to be pure velvet, this brilliant classified growth is quintessential. It's defined by aromas of caramel, blackberry and minerals, piquant spice flavors and the softest, most supple texture. The finish stretches out to the horizon and beyond.

St. Emilion: Chateau Pavie, 1993. This wine from the famous commune on the Right Bank has a most interesting coffeegrind, baked fruit aroma. The flavors are slightly vegetal, with cedary earthy undertones and a touch of hot spice in the finish. The breadth on the palate suggests the heavier soils of St. Emilion and the inclusion of high proportions of Merlot.

Pomerol: Chateau Certan de May, 1989. This wine's amazing flavors show clearly why grapes from the clay soils of Pomerol are so highly esteemed. It had evolved after several years in the bottle to show layers of tobacco, sweet cherry, vanilla and root vegetables, with a long smoky finish. The sleek, fleshy texture features an abundance of spice that lingers for quite some time afterward.

There were other wines included, but the seven listed (with the exception of the Margaux) struck me as fine examples of their appellations. ✦

Soroff/On MISHELLE MICHAELS

MISHELLE MICHAELS' EARLIEST CHILDHOOD MEMORY IS OF A FREAK tornado. A lifelong weather junkie, she was born in Calcutta to an Indian father and an American mother, and lived in Maryland until 1978 ("the year of the blizzard") when they moved to Saratoga, N.Y. As a kid, she measured snowfall and watched the weather forecast on all three network affiliates every night before going to bed. After studying meteorology at Cornell, she landed her first broadcasting job at WMUR in Manchester, N.H. She was hired by WHDH a year later, in 1993, partially because her passion for weather was evident from the vanity plates on her car, which read "T-STORM." While working as Channel 7's weekend meteorologist, she earned a master's degree at Harvard and became a visiting professor at UMass Lowell. She has turned down offers from CNN, WABC in N.Y. and CNBC, and she recently signed a new three-year contract with 'HDH because, as she explains, "I love forecasting New England, and I love Boston."

Jonathan Soroff: Can I blame El Niño for everything, like pimples or car problems?
Mishelle Michaels: My friends do. A dry dating season—directly related to El Niño. But in truth, it has no direct effect on our weather here.
JS: Who's more accurate—you, or the odds makers in Vegas?
MM: Us, naturally. Actually, it's hard to say, because weather is slightly subjective. My 'partly sunny' might be your idea of cloudy, so it's hard to verify a forecast.
JS: The Old Farmer's Almanac—how accurate is it?
MM: Well, there's only so many things the atmosphere can do, so it's bound to be right sometimes. For seasonal forecasts it's okay, but when you get down to day-to-day, short-range forecasts, it's not very scientific.
JS: So who the hell is the Old Farmer?
MM: Good question. Some fella who certainly made a name for himself. Speaking of which, we've compiled our own almanac—the 1998 7-Weather Almanac—which is free to the public.
JS: So predicting the weather isn't all done with darts?
MM: No. Only sometimes.
JS: What do you do on a snow day?
MM: I come in around 3:00 in the morning and leave around 7:00 the next night. The phone doesn't stop ringing. I'm flat out. And nobody delivers food.
JS: Did I hear recently that you got engaged?
MM: No. My dad gave me a very beautiful ring, which looks really huge against the Chroma-wall, and I think that's how that rumor got started.
JS: Can you predict your boyfriend's moods?
MM: Always really sunny, like the tropics.
JS: What's the scientific explanation for Groundhog Day?
MM: There isn't one, except maybe that people like goofy traditions. But every year, I think, "Hey, those varmints get more credibility than we do!"
JS: How tall are you?
MM: Shorter than I look on TV.
JS: What's the meteorological explanation for a bad hair day?
MM: If you have curly hair, like me, humidity makes it just a tad bit unruly.
JS: Fashion-wise, I think I look best in the colors of bad weather—grays, browns. Why is that?
MM: Those are natural colors and you're a natural guy.
JS: Who would win in a fistfight—Dick Albert or Bruce Schwoegler?
MM: They're equally tough. It'd be a draw. But Harvey Leonard's my absolute idol.
JS: David Brown, that meteorologist on Channel 5. What's with that hairpiece?
MM: I know nothing about that.
JS: How many more snow days this winter?
MM: I'll guess four.
JS: Can fog really get as thick as pea soup?
MM: Visibility can be reduced to zero, so yes.
JS: Is weather sexy?
MM: Absolutely. Anything smart and scientific is sexy.
JS: Who dresses you?
MM: I do, and I never have time to shop, so I'm big on catalogs.
JS: Do you ever feel like predicting a Biblical plague, like frogs or locusts or fire?
MM: That's a little out of the realm of a computer model. Global warming is probably the closest you'll get.
JS: Is global warming going to put you out of business?
MM: As long as the atmosphere acts in a chaotic way, I'll never be out of business.
JS: Would you ever live someplace like Arizona, where the weather's always the same?
MM: Never. I wouldn't even contemplate it.
JS: Would you ever name your child something weather-related, like Storm or Rain?
MM: That's yet to be determined. Maybe an Indian name with a weather-related meaning.
JS: Who would you most like to send off naked into a blizzard?
MM: Al Roker. I think he's the only person jovial enough to take it.
JS: Cold and flu season—explain, please.

OUR GALS FRIDAY

(and Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday....)

"Please call Princess Die," the telephone messages used to read. They landed on this Boston homicide detective's desk, or in that patrol officer's mail box. Few could resist the urge to return that mysterious call, even if it stood to reason and experience that a nut case and not royalty would pick up on the other end.

So they dialed the number and what they got with a jolt was someone who would become one of the city's top reporters: A woman who once could not get Boston cops to give her the time of day at a crime scene because they didn't know her, trust her or take her seriously. A woman who could not get detectives to return her phone calls with questions on an investigation even as deadlines loomed and higher-ups screamed.

She told her law enforcement callers the name was spelled "D-I-E" because she covered so many homicides. This was a reporter who needed to get sources inside the Boston PD.

So she made them laugh, and she did.

BOSTON'S NEW BREED OF FRONTLINE REPORTERS

BY PAMELA FERDINAND

Photographs By Kerry Brett

Turn on the television evening news and watch Mariellen Burns or Caterina Bandini standing in the cold outside a murder victim's home. Switch channels for a report from Amalia Barreda outside the Cambridge courthouse during Louise Woodward's trial. Or pick up the morning paper and read Ellen O'Brien's exclusive interview with a teenage killer from Somerville.

The modern myth may be that this town belongs to sports-politics media heavyweights and the likes of Howie Carr and Mike Barnicle, bellowing white male columnists with strong convictions and a penchant for provocation. But the reality is that other reporters' voices regularly rise above the urban news din day after day—and an increasing number of them belong to women. Women who are writing about corruption scandals, detailing murders, covering trials and telling stories that often feed your soul or break your heart.

They knock on victims' doors for an interview or photo after loved ones have died. They arrive first on the scene of a violent crime when wet blood still clings to the sidewalk. They cover Malden Mills ablaze at night and car accidents by day, get public reaction to trials in the morning and stake out houses in the afternoon. Static calls flash over police scanners and they race out the door with cellphones in hand, camera crews at the ready.

They ask tough questions to get the rest of us answers: When? Excuse me, what did you see? Did you hear the gunshots? Did you know him well? Who found the body? How long had they lived here? What hospital was she taken to? Did he suffer? Off the record, who do you really think did it?

While many Boston media women are sitting pretty with columns and anchor chairs, foreign posts, specialty beats and management positions, general assignment reporters who cover news of the day labor in the trenches without respite.

It's not the most glamorous job in the world nor the most well paid, and certainly not the most respected. But journalists who cover breaking news glimpse humanity in all its wonderful and terrible excesses and find it hard to shake the addiction of seeing things most people do not see.

Like spies who choose not to come in from the cold, they remain on the frontlines, close to the action. And they prefer it that way.

"If I spend one day staking out some poor family's home who just lost a baby, the next day I might be interviewing Isaac Stern," said Julie Ryan, 29, an Emmy-nominated up-and-comer at Channel 56 (WLVI-TV). "I never know what every day is going to bring, and that's both a blessing and a curse. Nobody falls into this job. You pick it, and you work for it."

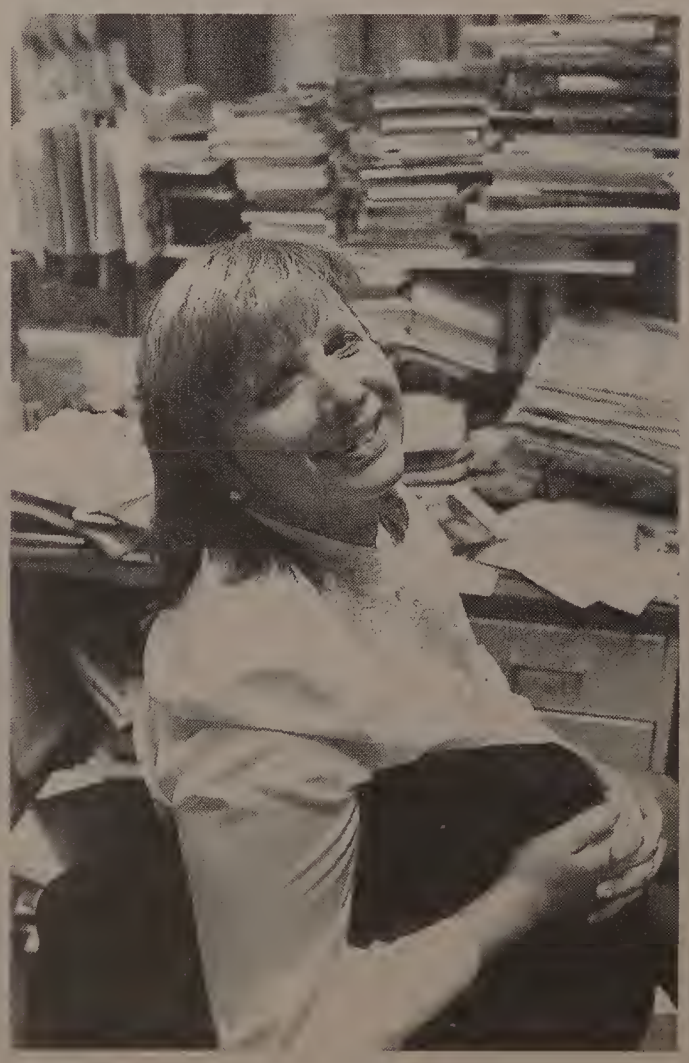
Way before Christiane Amanpour got paid the fattest foreign correspondent salary in the world, Diane Sawyer clinched prime time and New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd brought politicians to their knees, Nellie Bly broke into the news business the hard way.

In the late 19th century, Bly (born Elizabeth Cochrane Seaman) landed a job on The Pittsburgh Dispatch by writing an angry letter to the editor complaining about an editorial titled "What Girls are Good For" that suggested "not much." She went on to make a name for herself at Joseph Pulitzer's New York World with an exposé on asylum conditions that was a radical coup: Going undercover to get the scoop, she pretended to be insane and got herself committed.

Hollywood, picking up on such romantic mythology, began to glamorize the female reporter and her rough-and-tumble milieu. Movies depicted woman journalists as tough broads in cigar-smoking, poker-playing newsrooms where muckrakers paid off sources and appeared to memorize entire interviews.

"A journalist? What does that mean?" cracked Rosalind Russell as fast-talking newswoman Hildy Johnson who tries to escape the business in the 1940s remake His Girl Friday. "Peeking through keyholes, chasing after fire engines? Waking people up in the middle of the night to ask them if Hitler's going to start another war? Stealing pictures off old ladies? I know all about reporters, Walter."

The part of Hildy Johnson was originally written for a man, and indeed general assignment jobs historically went to men. For years, female journalists were shoehorned, sometimes unfairly, into colorful features and gentle lifestyle stories and were often unwilling or unable to adapt to the irregular schedule of a breaking news career.



Watergate and the sexual revolution inspired a new generation of newswomen, many of whom came through the back door and fought for their place at the front. Women won admission in 1971 to the formerly all-male National Press Club in Washington, D.C., which had restricted female reporters to a balcony for nearly two decades and not allowed them to ask questions during press conferences.

Years later, often after surviving a professional roller-coaster, these women and their successors have broken newsroom barriers, downed corrupt politicians, changed public policy and won the industry's highest awards.

Amalia Barreda, an award-winning reporter with Channel 5 (WCVB-TV), remembers being thrown into the media mix on the heels of affirmative action. With little experience, she accepted an on-air job in 1970s San Francisco and wound up covering the likes of Patty Hearst, the Black Panthers and Jim Jones. Not an easy task in the best of situations.

"My stomach hurt every day," recalled Barreda, 46, who is married to well-known criminal defense lawyer Joseph Balliro Sr. "I was 23 years old, and I said, 'I don't know how to do this.' They said, 'Don't worry, we'll train you.' That was a big lie. I got no training, and the guy who hired me was fired three weeks later. It was hell."

Nationwide, the number of full-time female reporters and editors appears to be slowly catching up to men. Federal labor statistics show roughly 95,000 men held full-time reporting and editing positions in 1990, the most recent year for which figures are available, compared to about 78,000 women in similar slots.

Workplace legislation and market forces have helped equalize pay and lessen discrimination while creative employment policies allow some parents to keep newsroom jobs. One newspaper editor, Boston Globe metro editor Teresa Hanafin, says she goes so far as to keep tabs on bylines by gender to ensure that women are reflected in her pages as frequently as men, a practice many editors elsewhere decry.

Getting the big story, however, is typically not about being a woman but landing in the right place at the right time and developing competitive news instincts. Julia Bovey of New England Cable News, for instance, goes to bed at 8 pm so she can start work and hit the ground running before daybreak.

"Anything that happened overnight, whatever is the absolute big story of the day, I get," said Bovey, 30, who started off in print journalism after college. "Usually I try to cut two small stories before 6 am and then go out to the location. For me, that can be Maine to Connecticut, and I am just live, live, live all morning until the early afternoon. I'm a hard-news person, and it's just the greatest."

Together and individually, Boston Herald reporters Beverly Ford and Ann Donlan covered most of the big crime stories of the past year.

It was a wrenching one: A Reading mother of four beaten to death, her body stashed in a rented storage locker. Another mother gunned down in Lowell while waiting at a bus stop with her children. A 10-year-old boy, Jeffrey Curley, allegedly murdered and raped by two suspected pedophiles, and two young boys who testified in graphic detail to severe mental and physical abuse at the hands of their parents.

The family of Sarah Pryor, who had been missing for nearly 13 years, finally buried her remains. An oversize Somerville teen, Eddie O'Brien, went to prison for stabbing his neighbor 98 times, and an English au pair convicted of shaking a baby to death was set free with time served.

"Never let them see you cry" is the standard newsroom line, especially for women who know that they have to look as tough as the boys to be taken seriously. But this year's cumulative tragedy was enough to reduce one longtime newsman to tears during a child's courtroom testimony. At least two other general assignment reporters asked their editors for a hiatus from covering tragedy.

For many of these reporters, Jeffrey Curley's murder was one of the most difficult stories of their careers.

After spending day after day interviewing his friends and family members, Julia Bovey recalls going to bed one night thinking Curley would be okay. He was a smart and strong kid, he would make it. She was wrong.

The body of the Cambridge 10-year-old was pulled from a Maine river in October, and two men in their 20s—Charles Jaynes and Salvatore Sicari—were charged with his murder.

Bovey tracked down Jaynes' middle school teacher, who told her that even at a young age the accused killer made her skin crawl. Courtroom testimony churned Bovey's insides, and when the boy's father addressed reporters outside his home, she nearly broke down in tears.

"Later that night, one of the Curley relatives told me he saw me welling up that afternoon," Bovey said. "He said, 'I can't tell you how much it meant to all of us to see that you are a real person.' It was tough because I wondered if I crossed the line of professionalism."

Even Ford, who has stepped over murder victims' blood and brains in her years of covering violent crime, found herself especially moved by Curley's death. Perhaps because her own son is close to the deceased boy's age. Perhaps because no one ever quite gets over hearing firsthand about something so despicable.

On October 4, before his body was located, Ford penned a morbidly straightforward lead: "A pair of sexual predators smothered a 10-year-old Cambridge boy with a gas-soaked rag, molested his lifeless body then put the child in a cement-filled container and dumped it in a New Hampshire river, authorities said yesterday."

"The Jeffrey Curley story just blew me completely away," said Ford, who joined the Herald as a general assignment reporter in 1983. (She declined to give her age, even though that is the type of Journalism 101 information every reporter is told to get.) "When I went to court, I really didn't expect to hear what I heard. I expected it to be a simple murder, and I was just floored by it. That one really bothered me but you just go on to the next one, I guess."

Boston, with its competitive news market and tightlipped police corps, has not been the easiest place for journalists who cover breaking news. One former homicide chief was widely known for using his favorite line on fair-haired female reporters: "You know there's only one way to tell if you're a true blonde."

But Ford, for one, made it clear early on that she wasn't out to win a popularity contest with police. "A cop said the other day that he thought I was fair, and that was the biggest compliment he could give to me," she said.

Judy Rakowsky at the Globe was also put through hoops by new law-enforcement sources in order to establish her trustworthiness as a reporter who understood the importance of protecting them. She provided them with names of other sources who would vouch for her, and she promised confidentiality to gain information. One law enforcement source even quizzed her knowledge of organized crime in Rhode Island.

"He said, 'I've never talked to any reporter, I don't see any reason to start,'" recalled Rakowsky, 39, who has covered federal law enforcement and breaking news for the Globe for more than five years. "I had to pass his test. I had to close my eyes, and we went to this particular part of Rhode Island. He asked, 'What mobster's girlfriend's house is that?' And I'm thinking, 'If I don't know whose girlfriend's house this is, I'll never get anything out of this guy.'"

She guessed right—or at least close enough to win his respect. Still, she adds, "You talk, talk, talk and talk before you can even get anywhere. It's a long trust curve, and you've got to be patient with that.

"My greatest exhilaration is when I'm digging something up, and I think I've got it and nobody else has it," she added. "Boy, it's hard work. It's really hard work. You just have to love it."

Personal crime scene styles vary. One woman reporter said she tries to mimic how TV newsman Charlie Austin frowns and nods knowingly as he starts conversation with local cops. Ford tends to hang out in the background, chatting about the Red Sox and discreetly prying for information.

The most successful breaking news reporters say a sense of humor and humility make people comfortable enough to talk to them, even in the worst situations of their lives. There is a certain guilt that goes along with having to ask people to open up to you knowing they are incredibly vulnerable, and yet most people want to talk—even need to talk.

"The toughest stories are when someone has lost a child," said Beth Germano, 36, who reports at night for Channel 4 (WBZ-TV). "There may be a message in that story that you want to get across, but there is a fine line that you cross invading someone's personal tragedy. You just try to be honest with them."

Ellen O'Brien, 31, knows that as well as the next reporter. She started out in Dallas in the early 1990s writing about socialites who had their husbands kidnapped and preachers who killed their pregnant wives while allegedly cleaning their rifles. She has since covered top stories from Morrissey Boulevard, confirming with off-the-record sources that Sarah Pryor's remains were discovered and writing a behind-the-scenes piece on the Reading murder investigation.

One of her toughest stories also happened to be one of last year's top stories: The fatal stabbing of an innocent Somerville woman, Janet Downing, by her teenage neighbor, Eddie O'Brien. An oddly lumbering figure, he stood 6-foot-3-inches and weighed 270 pounds at the time of his arrest.

When the murder occurred in the summer of 1995, O'Brien (no relation) was working hard to win a full-time job on the Globe's Metro desk. She went head-to-head on the story with Donlan, another University of Massachusetts-Amherst graduate and an equally aggressive reporter, and she diligently dogged both families and their attorneys for two years.

Ultimately, Eddie O'Brien's parents agreed to an interview with O'Brien because they presumably thought her coverage was fair and wanted the largest newspaper in New England to spread their side of the story. In exchange, the paper agreed to publish only a serious, not a smiling photo, of the accused teen on its Sunday magazine cover. O'Brien still detailed how he

"There is a fine line that you cross invading someone's personal tragedy. You just try to be honest with them." —Beth Germano joked and laughed during her interview, however.

"I tried to stay objective but I don't think there could be doubt in the O'Briens' minds that I thought he was going to be convicted," she said. "I just let them talk...I didn't guarantee them that people would read this and see their point."

By the time the Somerville teen was convicted last October, O'Brien barely needed her notes to tell the story. In a front-page article that appeared October 2, she wrote from the heart: "Edward S. O'Brien, a Somerville teenager who prosecutors say walked out of his house on a hot summer night and used a pocket knife to kill the mother of his best friend, is not coming home."

Such tragedies are compelling, O'Brien said, adding that she can usually identify with people in pain. In a subsequent magazine article, she would remind readers that the kid across their own street could be "the altar boy at your conversion to Catholicism—or at your funeral Mass." Just like Eddie O'Brien.

"Murder isn't universal, but loss is," she said. "What worked for me in some way in the O'Brien case is that their street reminded me of the street I grew up on in Malden."

The business is tough on personal lives as well as emotions, as O'Brien and others attest. Reporters must find partners willing to accept a grueling, unpredictable schedule that may mean a lifetime of last-minute cancellations.

When a story runs at full throttle for several days in a row, laundry and bills pile up and food in the refrigerator goes rotten. The patience of dates, not to mention boyfriends and husbands, is tested at every turn.

Kerry Brett

O'Brien, Ryan, Rakowsky and Bovey, among others, are single. Ford is married with a 12-year-old son; Germano, also married, has no children; Donlan and her husband, a Herald photographer, just had their second child. Barreda wed her husband in 1986; he has five children from a previous marriage.

Channel 7's Victoria Block (WHDH-TV) has won two local Emmy Awards for outstanding work in her 18 years as a reporter. Even so, she turned down a plum job offer in the past because her first husband objected. She is married again and has no children, but that does not mean the nature of her deadline job has dramatically altered.

"Whenever I make plans with people, I always say this could change," said Block, who is 46. "That's the way it's going to be until I leave this career because that's the way I've decided it's going to be."

When Barreda was offered the chance to cover Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis' funeral, she balked because it meant she would have to cancel her husband's birthday plans. He insisted she go. Ryan skipped her own birthday dinner with friends to interview a rape victim. And Germano, whose schedule typically runs 3 to 11 pm, says she would never see her husband if he did not work from home.

"I don't have much of a life outside work," said Ford, who works Monday through Friday 11 am to 7 pm, if she's lucky. "I monitor my son by phone. When he comes home from school, we have time to chat then. My husband is not in the business, but he's lived with this all his life."

Social lives may be a luxury, but the chance to cover big city news is often the payoff for time spent in lesser ditches. Even though younger and less expensive journalists are entering large markets more quickly than they used to, the small town-to-big market path is still one worn many times over by most reporters who make it to Boston.

At The Daily Transcript in Dedham, Ford did paste-up, wrote headlines and covered sewer committee meetings. Not so long ago Julia Bovey was making $6 an hour as a one-woman-band in Paducah, Kentucky, lugging around camera equipment and a 35-pound battery belt. And Julie Ryan was miles away in a small North Carolina town doing stand-ups for the opening of hunting season.

"It was more like Dukes of Hazzard than Gone With The Wind," said Ryan, who was hired for her first reporting job two months out of graduate school. "If shots were fired, that led the newscast. They didn't even have to hit anyone."

It's a competitive and witty crowd, one just as likely to swap social gossip as they are to dissect grammar in the day's paper. With thousands of miles on the road and hours on the street logged between them, everyone understands how tough it can be to explain the often inexplicable and how hard it is to make nice at a cocktail party when you've been looking at autopsy photos all day.

That sense of camaraderie pays off, too, when you are far from home, covering a disaster and staying in a $39-a-night motel room with no towels. It's then that you may need to rely on a familiar face to file a story, check a quote or share a post-deadline drink.

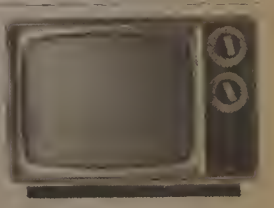
Consider this: Among the hundreds of reporters camping out together on Long Island and scavenging for minutiae scoops after the summer 1996 crash of TWA Flight 800—one of the biggest and most competitive stories of the year—there was Block sharing water and allowing virtual strangers to use her truck's electrical outlets to plug in computers and type their stories.

And here at home, while dozens of journalists sat in a cramped Cambridge courthouse media room braced to sprint past each other for a few spare seats at the Louise Woodward trial, there was Barreda sharing a video clip of the English au pair breaking down in tears with television competitors who had missed a beat.

"We're all in the same boat," Barreda said matter-of-factly. "We're all up on that awful 16th floor and the air is bad and the light is worse. If someone doesn't happen to roll tape and something happens, you give them a piece of tape."

Always on alert, Block and others keep pagers on their hips and passports at the ready in case they have to hop the next plane to Washington to stake-out Monica Lewinsky or to London to cover a royal's funeral.

In that wartime newspaper film where she tries to leave journalism, Rosalind Russell/Hildy Johnson ends up staying late in the press room to punch out a thrilling front-page story about an escaped convict. She was hooked—and there's more than one woman here who knows that feeling.



"I love it when they say, 'Can you be on a plane in 15 minutes?'" Block said. "You're just on the frontlines of life all the time." ✦

"I love it when they say, 'Can you be on a plane in 15 minutes?'"

Diary of a DATING SCHOOL DROPOUT

How To Be Mr. Right

BEFORE MEETING MARIA AT J.C. HILLARY'S ON BOYLSTON STREET, I KNOW ONLY TO IDENTIFY HER AS tall, blonde and Swedish—which bodes pretty well as blind dates go. What I also know, though—and the reason I've tweezed every stray hair off my face and gnawed my nails to pulp—is that Maria is more than, or less than, just a date. She's a "date coach," a professional consul d'amour who eats dinner with men, then judges them on everything from the shine of their shoes to the quality of their jokes. Despite my very real anxiety, our meeting is only a "mock date"—and I, for some reason, have agreed to bend over and settle in for a hard, thorough mocking.

Maria's service comes courtesy of Lasting Impressions, an Arlington-based business that since its inception last June has served about 100 men. The concept of "date consulting" is alarmingly simple: clients go on dates with strangers, then receive an objective, written summary of what they did right and what could have been better. For all you frustrated studs-in-the-rough out there, Lasting Impressions might be the best bet in town.

That is, if you can muster the nerve to call. Mention the mock-date concept to most men, and they twist their bodies as if being punched in the groin. But invariably, every "Why would you ever want to do that?" is followed by "I want to do that!", suggesting the undeniable allure of this business. Guys can't help concede: Where else are you going to find the chance to work on your dating chops, try out new techniques and receive an honest female opinion—without the worry of a damaged reputation?

The methodology behind mock dating has long been applied in professional training; corporations and consultants run "mock interviews" to improve their clients' image and delivery. But the pioneer of date consulting didn't originally use these services as an example. Instead, Bart Ellis, a therapist in Los Angeles, developed mock dates to help his learning disabled patients, who struggled to understand basic points of romance. Ellis hired students at UCLA to go on dates with these men, and then to follow up with a written review. Fox News caught wind of his approach, and asked Ellis to try the technique on a few everyday, "date disabled" folks—voila, "The Date Doctor," as he now calls himself, was born. Since its start eight years ago, the Los Angeles business has swelled, drawing thousands of desperate souls (including a few Hollywood bigwigs) in search of Ellis's Yoda-like wisdom to woo.

Boston's own Date Doctor isn't actually a doctor, nor even a therapist or psychologist, but Mara N. Edmunds, an ambitious, 24-year-old New Hampshire native who snagged a Harvard degree in six semesters before working a brief stint in marketing. By far her highest credentials derive from her personal dating history. After realizing she "had choices," Edmunds explains, she went on 100 blind dates in less than a year. Time and again, she found herself telling guys straight-up what went wrong. As she explains it, "I got tired of telling men why there wasn't going to be a second date—and not getting paid for it."

Edmunds expresses rare empathy for the plight of males: "I'm a masculist," she proclaims. As a result, her business aims not to spare women misery, but to lend a hand to us pathetic men, who she thinks suffer too often for the wrong reasons. "A lot of men clearly can use an objective perspective on how women perceive them," she says. "A mock date can be a sort of warm-up for the real thing."

Because Edmunds has no formal training in psychology, she bases her approach on what she knows. "We're marketing strategists, not therapists," she explains. "We help you to figure out the market you hope to date in, help with your marketability, and teach you how to present both a service and a product." From this perspective, Lasting Impressions aids men not only in presenting themselves to women, but also in discovering the qualities they require in a mate. Borrowing a term from the Date Doctor, Edmunds refers to a person's "non-negotiables," which she defines as "characteristics that you have to have in a partner, or that you refuse to tolerate." Some non-negotiables are as strictly defined as religion, height or income; others are more subtle, such as interest in leather, literature or commitment.

As Maria and I sit down in the steakhouse dining room, I quickly reflect on my own non-negotiables, hashed out during an hour-long pre-date consultation with Edmunds. Down-to-earth, I insisted. Reasonably attractive. A sense of humor. Lacking scary neuroses or game-playing tendencies.

Flustered, and already intensely paranoid that Maria's every question serves to test me, I dive into dull conversation. We discuss her job, skiing, her impressions of America and many things Swedish. I warm to her droll accent and occasional misuse of English date-talk: "Do you have any long-term relationships in your luggage?" she asks. She gushes about the dating scene in her native land, especially the go-get-'em status afforded to women there. Somehow, she misses the irony when saying things like: "I think when people are dating, they should be honest up front, and tell each other what problems they see."

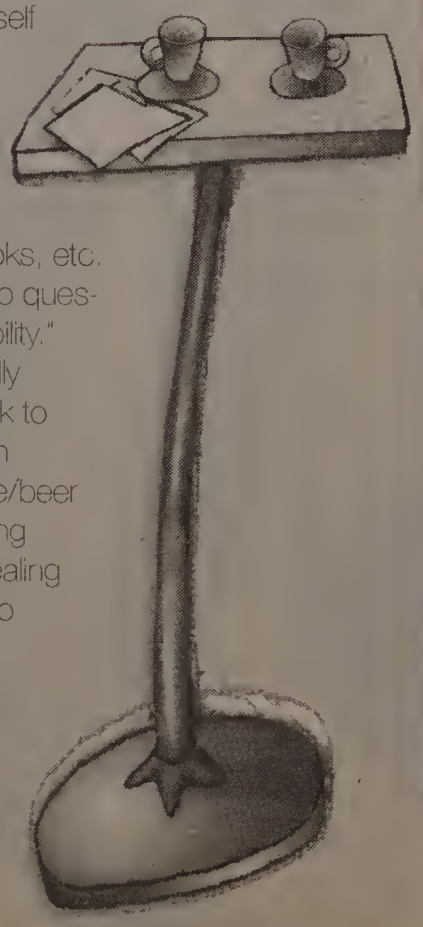
Never mind what lasting impressions Maria must have of American men, or what tales of hairy-eared frumpery she'll one day tell her Swedish sisters. For now, Maria claims to enjoy her job. Her international background fits well within the diverse spectrum found among the eight date coaches employed at Lasting Impressions, who range in age from 22 to 43. Maria works as an art therapist; another coach is an associate professor at MIT. A few even have husbands or boyfriends, who, understandably, sometimes take issue with their partners' line of work. Most important, says Edmunds, is that her coaches be "relatively attractive, good listeners, able to discuss a wide range of topics and pro-male." Whew. No bitter ballbusters. "Some women who apply say it's the perfect job because they get to criticize men," she says. "But it's not about that."

What it's also not about, Edmunds repeatedly emphasizes, is something akin to a dating or escort service. To avoid this confusion, and to ensure the safety of her coaches, Edmunds forbids any coach-client contact following the date. Despite her policy, she estimates that nearly half of her clients have pursued post-date relations. As Edmunds theorizes, "For some men, it's the first contact they've had with a woman in a while, and getting through those first stages is important."

Meanwhile, to keep the ladies in check, Edmunds employs a charming "client" who tries to seduce the coaches, tempting them to pass phone numbers on the side. So far, he has caught only one; she was fired the next day. Another coach voluntarily terminated her contract after deciding she wanted to see a client a second time.

I, increasingly hot for teacher, reflect on those two guys who picked up their coaches—lucky bastards, both of them—as I ladle another helping of charm onto Maria's plate. I coolly cock my eyebrow as the waitress pours my coffee with a flourish. I coyly open another button on my swank blue denim shirt. And from beneath Maria's dither, a menacing thunderhead of a thought starts to billow in my head: Me. Maria. Mock Date. Mock Sex.

And why not? Why shouldn't I pursue the next logical extension of this absurd situation—a raucous night of juried lovin'? After all, every guy secretly wants to know how he could perform better. What better way to learn than from a trained, disinterested party who won't tell her friends about his shortcomings? When I mention the idea to Edmunds, she first recoils, then laughs and assumes I'm joking. I'm not. Massachusetts may not be ready for mock sex, but Nevada surely is, and my bags are already packed.



But first: Maria. As our check arrives, my ego surging from a few well-received jokes, the Swede reminds me that this is no ordinary date. In the restaurant, right there at the table, she whips out a contract for me to sign, a sworn promise not to

(The writer originally refused to turn over his Date Evaluation, but we were able to retrieve the crumpled wad from his pockets after beating him senseless.)

"Overall physical presentation is good. Consider modifying: posture, to demonstrate confidence; wear a coat; attire very casual for first date."

"Conversation: Client talked about himself comfortably, asked questions confidently and directly, and listened attentively. Devote more energy to being a good listener, and give plenty of 'air-time' to date. Work to find balance in conversation, and use discussion of music, books, etc. to gauge common interests and ease into questions on values and more basic compatibility."

"Demeanor. Your behavior was generally acceptable. Areas for consideration: Work to make date feel special and unique. When ordering food, ask what kind of food/wine/beer she prefers. Take out chair when first sitting down at table. Be aware of manner of dealing with servers. Specific example: reaction to waitress' strange manner of pouring coffee. Reason: women tend to be sensitive to how a man treats other people encountered. Use of humor: Client demonstrated overall very good sense of humor. Be aware that irony is not always attractive." —C.K.

make a move on her. After she fails to come through with the "tonight, I'll make an exception" I desperately long for, I pay the bill and we go our separate ways.

Three days later, at Café Algiers in Cambridge, I meet Edmunds for my moment of truth. She presents me with an ominous gray envelope containing a single sheet of paper titled "Mock Date Evaluation and Areas for Improvement," an assessment she writes based on a checklist filled out by Maria regarding my attitude, behavior, demeanor and 50 excruciatingly exacting points of grooming and hygiene. "A significant minority of the men are shocked when they see their critiques, especially about things like hygiene," Edmunds says. "They never considered that they might have hair growing out of their ears. I do my best to deliver my criticism within an area for improvement, never as a flat-out criticism."

As for my performance: I did okay. Nothing that needs to be mentioned here, though. Really.

Edmunds charges $60 for the initial, pre-mock date consultation; $80 an hour (plus the cost of dinner) for the two-hour date itself; and another $60 for the post-date discussion of the critique. In other words, for most men, about $300, though about a quarter of the business' clients don't follow through with the mock date. Edmunds offers a 50 percent discount to "anyone in academics," which includes students, professors, university librarians and anybody else with a socially crippling university affiliation. "I have a soft spot in my heart for MIT grad students," she admits.

Edmunds' clients, while admittedly masochistic, come from a variety of backgrounds. They range in age from early-20s to late-40s, though most are in their late 30s. Some are club-hopping studs looking for something more than a one-night stand, others are blue-collar workers who received Lasting Impressions gift certificates from their unsatisfied significant others. A few are MIT engineers who have a hard time looking at, much less talking to, women, while many are recently divorced professionals who need a refresher course before re-entering the field. They do not, believe it or not, stink, pick their nose or otherwise grossly offend. They're simply ordinary guys looking for a personalized primer in being Mr. Right.

Edmunds refers to one of the most common complaints among her clients as "N.G.B. Syndrome"—the guys' dates always seem to end with the dreaded words, "You're a nice guy, but...." To cure N.G.B., Edmunds focuses on potential turnoffs: "We help to identify things that a woman wouldn't mind in a friend but would object to in a partner."

As for Nice Girl, But (and, sometimes, Nice Butt, Girl), Edmunds intends to offer her services to women as soon as possible. As a bonus, she thinks she'll be able to run group sessions for female clients, an approach that male ego excludes as a possibility among men. Edmunds also suspects that out of safety concerns, she'll have to rely on gay men as coaches for one-on-one mock dates with female clients.

And what's the most general advice Lasting Impressions can impart on frustrated first-daters everywhere? The same lessons I learned from my evening with Maria: in Edmunds' words, "Relax, take it casually. Get the information you need. Try to find common ground, common values. Be investigating, but have a good time. And remember that you can have a good time with somebody you'll never see again." ✦

Bayou Bliss at the Beaux Arts Ball

The flights to New Orleans are all booked, and although Boylston Street ain't Bourbon Street, you can hunker down in Beantown, dress up as anything you want and make a fool of yourself—all the while supporting the-a-tah instead of breast-baring. The third annual Beaux Arts Ball, to support Coyote Theatre's sixth season, is a festive masquerade party. Come dressed for fun and enjoy a showcase of local talent, dance music by Boston's best DJs, costume prizes and a silent auction. The tradition of mixing mystery with festive celebration takes places March 7 at the Swissotel from 9 pm to 2 am. Tickets are $20-45, call 695-0659.

MAMMA MARIA

It's no surprise people are still talking about Mamma Maria . . .

"Best Italian Cuisine Delicious Northern Italian and Mediterranean Cuisine" Frommers Boston 1997

Fiddle Off

Guys—don your skirts and get your hairy legs over to the Somerville Theatre on March 6 for the Celtic Fiddle Festival (no, there won't be any basketball players). World Music presents a melange of traditional fiddling featuring Scotish, Irish and Breton music. The Celtic Fiddle Festival brings the best-known and loved fiddlers from around the world for an evening of instrumental magic—Kevin Burke (Ireland), Johnny Cunningham (Scotland) and Christian LeMaitre (Brittany) perform both as soloists of their respective indigenous music and together as a combined Celtic force. The show starts at 8 pm and tickets cost $18-22, call 876-4275.

Hollywood Wows the Wilbur

Although surely less bloody than Pulp Fiction, Reservoir Dogs and Natural Born Killers, Quentin Tarantino nonetheless is making his Broadway debut, alongside Marisa Tomei, in Wait Until Dark. Tomei plays Susy Hendrix, a blind woman who unwittingly becomes involved in the underworld dealings of a sinister drug trafficker, Harry Roat Jr., played by, you guessed it, Tarantino. The production runs from February 28 through March 22 at the Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St. Tickets are $35-62.50, call 931-2787.

Frisch Fest

Max Frisch's 1958 play, Biedermann and the Firebugs, has been called by its author "a morality play without a moral." Running from February 27-March 1 and March 6-7, Biedermann is described as a spooky comedy which looks at our innate capacity for self-deception and tendency to avoid moral and social responsibilities. The play is set in a city traumatized by arson and mistrust where Gottlieb Biedermann and his wife Babette attempt a succession of futile ploys to rid themselves of two strangers who have invaded their home. The Cambridge Multicultural Arts Center's historic ballroom, at 41 Second St., has been transformed into an intimate theater-in-the-round for the five performances. A $10 donation is encouraged of audiences, call 931-2000.

Sushi & Champagne

Beginning March 6 and running every Friday night through March, chef Jam Navaraj rolls his own sushi and pairs it with various French champagnes at The Exchange Restaurant and Cafe on State Street. For a mere $25, guests will be joined by the chef as he acquaints them with the various subtleties of the champagne and how they are matched with the sushi. Call 726-7600 for more information.

Wine Dinner

Chef/owner Anthony Ambrose presents a special wine dinner with Newton Vineyards of Napa Valley on March 2 at 7 pm at Ambrosia on Huntington. The wine dinner costs $100 per person (including tax and gratuity), call 247-2400 for reservations.

Brewers Banquets

Redbones in Somerville offers a Brewers Banquet on March 2 and 3 at 7 pm. For $30 per person, the banquet includes a three-course BBQ dinner, three pints of featured brews (stouts, porters and barleywines), a guest speaker, games and prizes. Call 628-2200 for reservations.

Scotch

Turner Fisheries of Boston presents ScotsFest '98 on February 26 from 5-8 pm. Featuring Glenkinchie, Pinch, Dalwhinnie, Johnnie Walker Blue and Cragganmore, Scotch ambassadors from Schiefflin & Somerset will educate guests on the history of Scotch, including single malts and blends. "Nosings" will be conducted to help differentiate various Schiefflin & Somerset Scotch Whiskies. Call 424-7425 for reservations.

Mardi Gras

Magnolias' in Cambridge celebrates the delicacies of the bayou from February 24 through March 28 with its Mardi Gras Festival. Snacks

Tanjore in Cambridge is the first restaurant in Boston to serve "nashtas," which means snacks. Served between meals or late-nite in India, the personal-sized portions can also be made into a meal just as you would at a Chinese dim sum. Some of the nashtas treats include Ragda Pettis (potato patties on a bed of white peas topped with tamarind), Dahi Bhalla (lentil dumplings with yogurt) and Reshmi Kabobs (a "pate" of chicken and herbs wrapped around a skewer and charcoal-grilled). Prices range from $4-8.

Recipe Festival

Boston Park Plaza Hotel has whipped up a dozen zesty weekends featuring international cooking demonstrations by famous Boston chefs for The Great Recipe Festival. Chefs and celebrities will share secrets and stories and feed patrons their specialties through March 29. The near future will entertain Prabhas "Jam" Navaraj of The Exchange on February 28 and Bruce Marks of Boston Ballet on March 7.

Champagne and Caviar

Kicking off 1998 with style, Plaza III • The Kansas City Steakhouse in the heart of Faneuil Hall introduces a Champagne, Oyster & American Caviar Bar. A selection of moderately-priced American "methode champenoise" sparkling wines and "grand marque" French champagnes by-the-glass will be served, accompanied by an appealing array of appetizers from across North America, including freshly shucked oysters on the half-shell, sturgeon caviar, golden caviar, oysters Rockefeller and Nova Scotia smoked salmon.

Wine Seminars

Also featured at Plaza III this winter is the Monday Evening Series of Wine Seminars & Events. Master sommelier Harold Toussaint brings his mobile wine academy to the American Royal Room at 6 pm to enchant guests with his vast vino knowledge. Guests will taste his selections, accompanied by cheese and fruits. March 9 features California: French Wine Dinner, a discussion on the marriage of food and wine. Call 720-5570 for more information and reservations.

An Alan Smithee Film: Burn, Hollywood, Burn ★
The creator of this tedious poison pen letter to Hollywood, screenwriter Joe Eszterhas (Flashdance, Showgirls) has profited wildly, and baffingly, from the industry. The plot hinges on the fact that if a director declines credit for a film, it goes to the fictitious Alan Smithee. What if a man named Alan Smithee wants his name off a film? AASF, a mockumentary, examines the hubbub caused when the negative of a $200 million action movie is stolen by eccentric director Smithee (Eric Idle), because the autocratic producers recut it. Hollywood types are lampooned and cameos pepper the film. As satire, AASF has its finger firmly on the pulse—of the 80s. The egotistical producers (Ryan O'Neil and Richard Jeni) seem based on Don Simpson and Jerry Bruckheimer; references to Mike Ovitz, an Eszterhas foe, abound. The feel is akin to someone laughing too loud at his own jokes. Comedy hack Arthur Hiller directed the movie but had his name taken off it. Only Jackie Chan comes out ahead—he co-stars in the action movie with Sylvester Stallone and Whoopi Goldberg, and is thus presented as their box office peer.

Live Flesh ★★★1/2
If you remember Spanish director Pedro Almodovar as a master of sustained hysteria with comedies such as Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown, discover how he has become much more. The funny, emotionally engaging Live Flesh is the story of a vendetta that is perverse and ennobling. Liberto Rabal stars as Victor, the fall-guy in a violent incident. Once the young man gets out of jail, he steps into the life of the woman who wronged him and of the cop who was shot. They're now married, and the paralyzed former cop is a wheelchair basketball star. The passions that swirl within Victor are channeled into his sexual education from Carla (Angela Molina), abused wife of another cop. Plot is subordinate to the escalation of tensions in this unchained melodrama. Almodovar, past maestro of excess, has evolved as a director of actors, embracing the credo "less is more."

The Wind in the Willows ★★★
Terry Jones of Monty Python fame has made an enjoyable live-action version of the Kenneth Grahame classic. It is chiefly aimed at children, so don't expect much subversive comic content in spite of the fact that the film features all four acting Pythoners—Jones as Toad and Eric Idle as Rat, with cameos by John Cleese as a lawyer and Michael Palin as the son. Rounding out the cast are Nicol Williamson as Badger, Antony Sher as head of the villainous weasels, and Steve Coogan as a Stan Laurel-ish Mole. Sit back and savor the silliness of Jones' ebullient toad racing recklessly in motorcars or the dastardly weasels coming on like Thatcherite yuppies as they plan to dig up and develop the woodsy paradise and—gasp!—ban picnics. The movie has a limited engagement at the Brattle Theatre.

The Apostle ★★★★
Robert Duvall's compelling movie, which he wrote and directed as well as stars in, is bravely conflicted about its volatile Southern preacher protagonist. Yet it never suggests a superior point of view towards him or his Bible Belt world. Duvall records behavior from eye-level, accepting what he sees and hears as he shapes it into a narrative. The movie handles issues of religion and race with a refreshing directness. Miranda Richardson adds to her portfolio of vivid characterizations as the amusingly sparrow-like secretary that the preacher romances. Duvall also mines gold with nonprofessionals, especially the exuberant church ladies.

Ma Vie en Rose ★★★
There's both charm and grit in this fairy-tale-like French-language film from Belgium by first-time feature director Alain Berliner. Georges du Fresne is utterly perfect in the lead as seven-year-old Ludovic, who is convinced that he's a girl trapped in the body of a boy. His family has just moved into a candy-colored suburb when Ludovic begins raising eyebrows by dressing up in his mother's clothes and announcing that he wants to marry his pal Jerome. The movie enters Ludo's fantasy world, centered around a Barbie-like doll named Pam (there are dreamy computer-animated scenes), but it also trenchantly handles serious issues of gender identity and parenting. Ludo's parents (subtly played by Michele LaRoque and Jean-Pierre Escoffey) cope differently as they realize that Ludo's firmly held conviction is not just a phase.

The Replacement Killers ★★★
The debut Hollywood vehicle for Hong Kong star Chow Yun-fat—John Woo's actor of choice—could be considered "The Killer" Comes to America. Chow plays a hitman who refuses to pull the trigger when a child is in the crosshairs. The big boss sends in terminator-like replacements to rub the repentent killer out and complete the hit. A forger gets mixed up in the mayhem and becomes Chow's ally (Mira Sorvino commits admirably to her Femme Nikita toughie). Music video director Antoine Fuqua, making his feature debut, provides hothouse-lush visuals and cleverly uses music to cue mood. But Chow, the Sexiest Man in the Universe, doesn't even get to crack a smile. He smolders effectively as the efficient but reluctant killer and wields guns with Astaire-like grace, but here's hoping he gets to show more range of personality in his next few American pictures.

Four Days in September ★★★

Eric Idle and Steve Coogan in The Wind in the Willows.

Tea and Tunes

Afternoon tea at the Bristol Lounge of the Four Seasons Hotel will get a little livelier this winter with the addition of the Harvard Krokodiles. Slug back tea (blow first) to the tunes of Harvard University's oldest a cappella singing group the first Saturday of every month from January through May and September through December from 3:30-4 pm.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Euro

Forget Seth Greenberg's haunts for the hottest Euro scene—hit Turner Fisheries at the Westin Copley Place Boston instead with its EuroCuisine '98. Chef David Filippetti takes you on a culinary excursion spiced with European Michelin guest chef visits, cookbook signings and wine tastings. Menu specials will be paired with wines from Laboure-Roi and Chateau Lynch. Don't miss the Pan Seared Scallops Pancetta, and don't forget to stick your pinkie out ever so delicately while sipping your wine.

Chocoholics

Add to your waistline for a great cause. All winter Grill 23 on Berkeley Street serves a Chocolate Sampler Plate, consisting of several unique chocolate desserts created by pastry chef Judy Mattera, to benefit Share Our Strength. Two chocoholics can feast fabulously on the $20 house-made truffles, mousse, custard, cookies and cakes, with $5 to charity.

Improper IMPERSONALS

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. That's why we have the Improper Impersonals, a column written by you, the reader. Send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And it's free! Pick up a pen and tell that babe on the T you like his butt by writing to Improper Impersonals, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, 75 Arlington Street, 9th Floor Boston, MA 02116, fax: (617) 859-1446 or e-mail us at editor@improper.com. Recent correspondence follows.

To Our Readers
In our January 14, 1998 issue, an "Improper Impersonal" signed "PAY FOR THE BIKE" errantly referred by name to an "Ed" in connection with an alleged bicycle accident in Oakland Square in the summer of 1997. We have since been informed that the cyclist involved was riding illegally on the sidewalk, and hit the side of "Ed"'s vehicle, which caused damage to the cyclist and the cyclist's bike as "Ed" pulled out of his driveway. Plainly there are two sides to this story. We apologize to "Ed" and deeply regret any embarrassment that the publication of this item might have caused.

Hey You
You bought my drawing "Lurid City." Thanks! If it's not inconvenient for you, I'd love the chance to photograph it. I believe you have my phone number. Please call.
LURID ARTIST

You Live in Brookline
I used to see you on the train every morning. Our eyes met a few times. The last time I saw you was a Saturday afternoon on the train going home. You overheard a conversation when someone asked me about living in Brookline. I have long brown hair and brown eyes. You have brown hair, beautiful brown eyes and gorgeous lips. I would like the opportunity to get to know you better. Respond to me through here. Or, if you happen to see me first, smile and say hi.

To My Darling Bashful One
I'm enjoying doing time with you in the Big House, but there is much more for us to share in the real world. By all means take your time; meanwhile, please let me know whether you care. The warmth of your voice stirs me as much as your touch has. Money is no more important than all that dusty old furniture and those lovely knick knacks. To me, you could not be more successful. We are all works in progress, but you're more complete than anyone I have known. If you don't like this message, tell me to go soak my head.

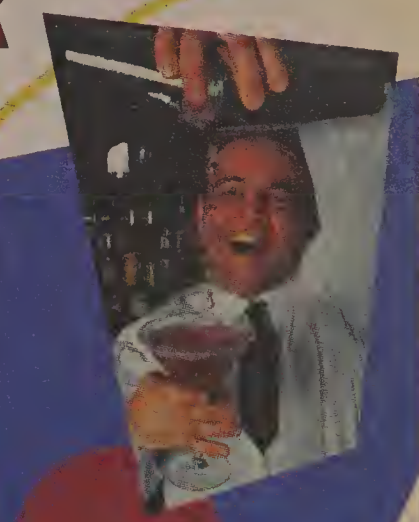
Banana Republic
You helped me try on the leather jacket at Banana Republic—I couldn't decide on size so I asked your opinion because of how stunning you looked in your blue scarf with your hair tucked behind your ear. I spent 15 minutes looking at ugly ties trying to ask you out for coffee. But I didn't get the words out—so how about now? E-mail me at visionquest29@hotmail.com.
LEATHER GUY

To the Upstairs Female Bartender in Cambridge
I didn't spend $10 to listen to a DJ and $3.50 per beer to get abused by you. Yes, my mistake was not tipping on the first beer, but I didn't like your attitude so I didn't tip on the next three. You insulted me, accused me of taking change when I dug in my pocket to get quarters and at that time I was gonna leave you a tip, but no way. You are an ugly scag who should not be working in the public. I saw you treat people all night pretty much the same way. I hope you lose your job over this one!
NOT CHEAP



TTB
Is this definitely over? I miss you and I don't think we understand each other—I don't think we both understand what happened. Give me a call if this is something you want to talk about at all, if you think our friendship stands a chance. I am willing to try but I feel strongly that the next move has to come from you. I can't do all of the work although I will do my share. Been flirting with any waitresses lately?

S
Do you think of me ever? It's been months and I should have forgotten about you but I can't. When you held me it felt like home, only I was too terrified to stay. I never wrote to you because it hurt me when you denied what we could be to each other, and returned my honesty with bullshit and clichés. In the end I have to admit that you were probably right, that our friendship was probably something we both had to go through and move past. It's been the moving past that's been hard for me though, because even though I know none of it matters now, when I look across a table or a T stop, across my pillow or across a room, yours is still the face I want to see. My birthday is February 11, but I will accept gifts at any time it is convenient for you.
YOUR SISTER

Amber From Boston on the Connection (WBUR)

A CONNECTION LISTENER

Never Say No
Consistent with your "Never Say No" cover story, I would like to extend a purely philanthropic offer of my own. Fully empathizing with young Abby's plight of "relationship boredom" ("On the Street," January 14 issue), I am quite willing to assist in her quest for the coveted "torrid, tumultuous, unhealthy relationship." Fortuitously, I too live in Back Bay. Moreover, I have invaluable experience in relationships of this nature. Any one of my last three ex-girlfriends (hey, it's been a rough year so far) will attest to this. In fairness, I should add that in addition to the aforementioned descriptives, the relationships did have their share of negative attributes as well.
Okay...there you go. Again, I'm just trying to do my part to make the world a better place for everyone. (Insert really biting, sarcastic 'yah, right' comment here). If possible, please contact me here.

Rockie HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

FEBRUARY 25 - MARCH 10, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Reacting to the solar eclipse is all you might be good for for the next few days. Until your Mars ruler enters your sign next Wednesday morning, you're basically in Piscean repose mode, reclusive and elusive, just like a fish. However, midweek you rise, like the magnificent horny beast you truly are, to make friendly overtures to a Libra, Taurus or Aquarius who captures your fancy or, even better, shows up in a dream this weekend. Artists and adventurers, eccentrics and explorers can attain a personal goal or receive support from a figure high in your field.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

You might feel the ground slipping away under your feet, not because of another mudslide, but because your Venus ruler is leaving earthbound Capricorn for airy Aquarius. The shift doesn't happen until next Wednesday, but the days before and after the event are considered "wobbly." Under these circumstances, it'll be difficult to know if the attraction you feel for an Aries is mutual or if the wave of romantic notions you're riding is a figment of your imagination caused by a dreamy Venus-Neptune conjunction. No matter, enjoy.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

You should know that in a month (March 27, at the Aries new moon) your Mercury ruler will go retrograde. Now you can organize your life so that the three-week retrogression won't get in your way or keep you from your appointed rounds. Unlike the mailman, your Mercury ruler is easily buffeted by the winds of change and, consequently, so are you. Consistency is a quality all Geminis should cultivate, so why not start right now, before you're blown away next Thursday by a super-romantic, idealistic notion about sex and joint holdings.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Look out for an agent provocateur, someone who will stir up the soup (hot and sour?), the arrangement or deal that is currently on the table. Romantic partnerships and career objectives are modified later in the week as players switch styles. You might try being more aggressive at work and less tradition-bound when dating. Somehow these modifications can help you reach your idealized goals, especially if they involve Neptunian music or movie making and the Aquarian electronic media.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Lions born near the Cancer cusp are the ones most likely to be awed by the power of love and the confusion it can cause next Thursday. That's when loving Venus, sexy Mars and ever hopeful Neptune spin you into orbit. Until then, be grateful that you're able to cruise along, holding your own despite the ups and downs significant others are going through. The rest of the Leos are content to watch, perhaps anticipate, feeling the dizzying rush themselves sometime around St. Patrick's Day.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Well, if you have a life of your own, I can't see where you're hiding it. Feel free to escape into the mystic simply because your Mercury ruler is in the all-encompassing, cosmically attuned sign of Pisces. However, all your attention (all the planets) seem to me to be focused on children, lovers, playmates, teammates, co-workers and the partners (then and now) in life and in business. Given a choice, I'd go with the lovers, the kids and whatever hot entertainment alternative you can create for next weekend.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Does anyone remember the 10 days before Christmas? What happened when your Venus ruler was in the early degrees of Aquarius, before it turned retrograde on Boxing Day, can occur again. Once Venus crosses over from Capricorn on Wednesday, what concerned you back then can become of major interest again. Only this time, you'll have a better perspective and less angst, not to mention no more holiday blues. You may even feel somewhat blissed out and definitely blessed when Venus meets exquisite, artistic Neptune late next Thursday night.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

I'll start out with a warning: The harmful aspects formed by Mars and Pluto, your co-ruling planets, are in effect, so continue to watch your back and what you say at least until the weekend is over. Around Wednesday, after Mars is safely back in Aries, the other sign it rules, you can breath easy again. You can also think about a new adventure, another enterprise that takes a bit of courage. Look for an appreciative audience, maybe even a love interest, in your immediate neighborhood, local paper or on the Net.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Everybody may be a little rocked by the total solar eclipse, so take it slow until you see which way the Piscean tidal wave of emotions is headed. Then either step aside or, if you're hell-bent on martyrdom, step right into someone else's tragedy and play the parent. Midweek, there's more than one indication that you can acquire glorious art or the trappings of romance—the musical instrument, the heavenly sheets—for a stylish seduction.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

It may take a few days to realize what kind of damage the solar eclipse might do to your finances. It's possible nothing terribly dramatic will follow this powerful phenomenon, but I'd keep an eye on all transactions for a while, just to be sure. Next week, there's a good chance that you might inadvertently stumble into a romantic situation that is based more on fantasy than on fact. As long as you realize that your imagination is working overtime, feel free to play the part, but don't play on someone else's true feelings.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Not much happens this weekend. However, come Wednesday, things can change for the better. Loving Venus enters Aquarius and makes you feel ever so much more desirable. You may recall the way you felt, the attention you received the weeks before Christmas, before Venus turned retrograde. To prove that you're lovely to look at and delightful to know, Venus aspects Mars that night and attracts someone special. By next Friday, you could be flying high.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Happy Birthday. The best present is nothing more exciting than what the solar eclipse might bring. There's always dramatic action on a worldwide scale after such an awesome phenomenon, so ride the waves with your customary cool and wait to see what changes will come about after Mars leaves your sign next Wednesday. If you've been overly stimulated lately or felt like fighting (maybe just rubbing up against?) an odd assortment of people, blame or thank the horny god of war. Those days will be gone soon.

AGATHA CHRISTIE, EAT YOUR HEART OUT....

Camden, Maine, might seem like a long way to go just to watch somebody get murdered, but a group of Boston's upper-yuppies drove all the way there, at the invitation of South End interior designer Kent Hammond Keatinge, for a murder mystery weekend at the Norumbega Inn (which Keatinge owns).

Among the suspects, usual and otherwise, were West Street Grille proprietor Nelse Clark, the cleft-chinned Duncan Hughes, mustachioed maniac BMaynard Scarborough, record minxes Lisa Mastrianni of MCA and Revolution's Jamie Schwartz, professional duffer Joe McMann, who owns City Golf, institutional equity peddler Danny Farren of Credit Suisse, artist and hyperactive tractor heir Stephens Dunne and his adoring fiancee, Molly Schnorr, the newly engaged Charles Aggouras and Lisa Marcus, heavenly headhunter Jamie Palmer (daughter of Hall-of-Famer Jim) and accomplished fly-fisherman and corporate marketing mag-daddy Jeff Doyle, to name a few.

Prior to arriving, guests received dossiers outlining their fictional characters and the premise of the weekend—a fundraising house-party for a crooked US Senator, during the 1920s. Once there, everyone was expected to dress in period clothing and to stay in character while the mystery unfolded, during cocktails and dinner on Friday night, breakfast the next morning, an afternoon interrogation session and a formal dinner Saturday night.

As it turned out, Doyle was the culprit, but more difficult than solving the whodunnit was figuring out how five adults could fit into a bathtub and pretending that Prohibition was in effect.

Sipping whiskey from a silver flask, one attendee remarked, "Can you imagine if we'd lived through the '20s?"

To which another responded, "If you'd been alive in the '20s, you wouldn't have lived through it."

BUT WHAT DO YOU REALLY THINK?

The heavyhitters were out in full force for the Boys and Girls Clubs' fundraising dinner at the Sheraton to honor Boston's banking community.

Among them: Channel 7 owner Ed Ansin (who announced a $2.6 million gift, with his brother, Ron, in memory of their parents), banking's Father, Son and Holy Ghost—Chad Gifford, Terry Murray and Marshall Carter (of BankBoston, Fleet and State Street, respectively)—"Mr. and Mrs. Staples" Tom and Dola Stemberg, storage king Ladd Levis-Thorne of Fortress and his stunning spouse, Sigrid, state treasurer Joe Malone, United Way force of nature Marian Heard, human dynamo Colette Phillips, financial bigwigs Ira Jackson and John Hamill, stockbroker-to-the-stars John Spooner, real estate developer and presidential pal Dick Friedman, the Reverend Eugene Rivers, Red Sox muckymuck John Buckley, Herald publisher Pat Purcell and brassy stockbroker Sheryl Marshall, who was standing by the hors d'ouevre table when she was overheard saying, "What a pile of shit!"

"Oh, not the food," she clarified, upon realizing that yours truly was eavesdropping. "I was referring to that article in Vanity Fair about Brown catering to the children of the rich and famous. It's a pile of shit, and you can quote me on that."

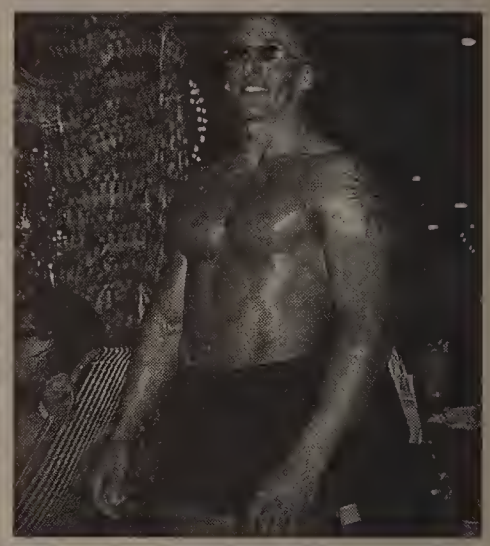
FOOD, GLORIOUS FOOD....

Like moths to the proverbial flame, gluttons and gourmands swarmed to the grandaddy of all food events, the 13th annual Spinazzola Gala, at the World Trade Center, where 118 restaurants and 91 wineries plied the crowd with food and drink.

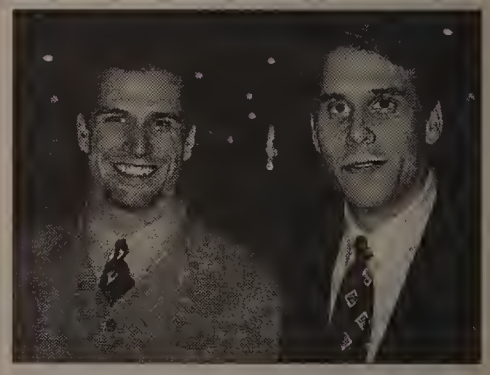
Spotted among the throng: brother-of-Bruin Scott Neely with combustible jazz singer Jeanie Flynn and Bruins heartthrob Rob Talas, cigar trend perpetuator Mark Bice of Punch Bar, the unspeakably exquisite Esti Benson of Zinc, legendary chef Jean-Louis Palladin, diminutive catering mogul Stephen Elmont, chatting with irascible restaurateur Anthony Athanas, Channel 5 entertainmentatrix Dixie Whatley and her colleague, Liz Bruner, accompanied by fashion designer Denise Hajjar, the dashing Peter Mondavi (of the wine-making Mondavis) and one woman who said, "I couldn't eat another thing, unless it was one of those muscle boys over there," referring to two heavily-oiled bodybuilders posing for Red Raven's Havana (a Salem restaurant whose booth had a "Mussel Beach" theme).

Meanwhile, Maureen Griffin, the stunning fiancee of former Kiss-108 owner Richie Balsbaugh, proved that she's a natural blonde by joking, "I keep looking for a McDonald's, but I can't find one."

IF THE ICE CAPADES SERVED ALCOHOL....



"This party should be black-tie," said one guest. "That way, all the guys would look like penguins gliding around on the ice."



The soiree in question was a benefit for the Neighborhood Network, a Valentine's party that began with skating on the Frog Pond on Boston Common.

Seen on the rink, risking life and limb, were Beacon Hellion Nat Lovell, proto-babe Lisa Rebello, super eligible internet whiz Todd Kurland, interior designer and supermarket heiress Fotene Demoulas, wholesome twosome Coryn and David Hall, Venezuelan playboy Robert Zdanis, pulchritudinous paparazzo Cheryl Richards and TV reporter extraordinaire Ann Dufresne with her architect husband Herb Kuendig.

Once everyone's toes were numb, they headed over for dinner and dancing at the Hampshire House, where several hundred less hearty souls joined them.

"Why weren't you skating?" a sporty brunette demanded of her friend, who looked at her as if to say "Duh!" and answered, "Simple—I value my ass." ✦

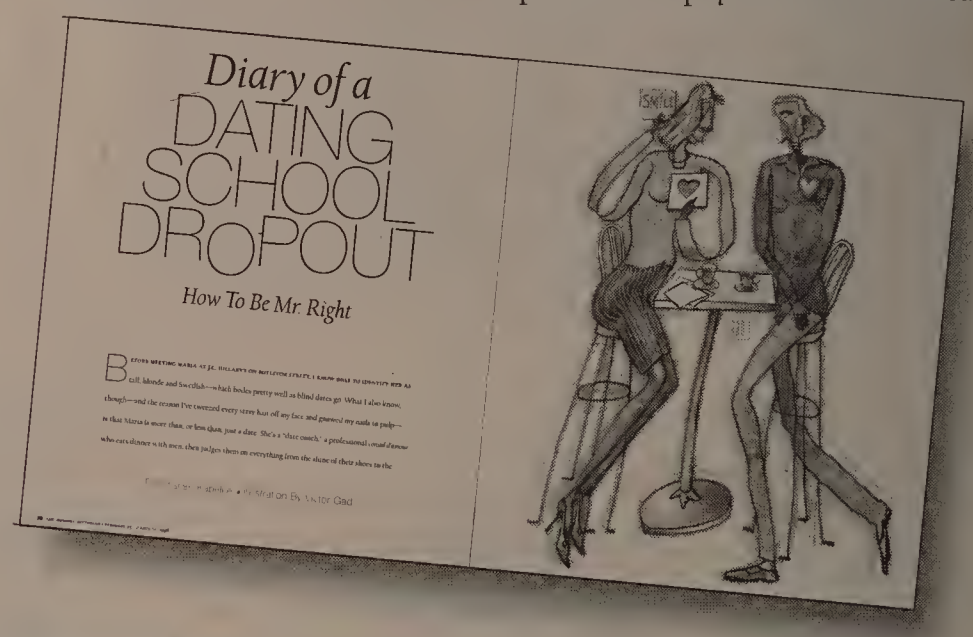
Our Slaps Come Face-First

Just a quick note to say thanks for the profile (Soroff/On, February 11). In a year when I received a good deal of backhanded slaps in the face from the press, it was cool to talk to Jonathan Soroff, who wasn't trying to paint me as an "upstart" or a flash in the pan. So again, I thank the entire dysfunctional IMPROPER BOSTONIAN family!

NIK CARTER
WBCN, Boston

PS: Not to repeat myself, but while I know many have wondered, your question of "Why are so many people surprised that you're black?" was tremendously ballsy.



And They Say Time Heals All Wounds

In response to Kristen Bisson's article "Tough Love" in the February 11 issue, I pose the simple question: When you refer to Bostonian professional women as "ambitious" are you sure that you don't mean "greedy"? It seems to me that for the majority of professional women, love is more of an investment than an emotional journey. "Is he ambitious?" translates nicely into, "What is his earning potential?" "I'm not sure he's the one," becomes "Let me check out my other options before I stick my funds into anything long term."

Perhaps my interest in this subject stems from an incident when I was 16 and a 22-year-old lured my girlfriend away, promising a trip to Paris (which she never got before she was discarded after he had his fill. Ha Ha). And now I am a constant observer of this dynamic, watching from my perch on Charles Street. In the words of a stand-up comic, "After you get out of school, women stop asking 'What's your major?' and start to ask 'What do you do for a living?' They never ask, 'What do you enjoy doing?'" As for ambition, I am an ambitious painter. This means doo-doo to the average professional woman.

The bottom line is this: Women are swayed by money; men are swayed by sex. That is why on a night of socializing (researching options) men wear thousand dollar suits while women wear next to nothing. Don't get me wrong, I have nothing against this. I distance myself from it. I've learned to stay with my own kind. My only objection is don't call it love.

Back At You, Babe

On the subject of mock dating, described in "Diary of a Dating School Dropout" by Charles Kapelke in your February 25 issue, I am completely bewildered. Let's see, the dating "judge" (or Maria as she is called in the story) has no professional training except as an art therapist (whatever that is). And the boss of this huckster operation cites her best credentials were getting (probably) free dinner and a movie on some of those 100 guys—assuming all those blind dates were guys. I just can't comprehend where Mara Edmunds, with her Harvard degree, gets the nerve to judge someone based on her own set of dating parameters. My curiosity on her private life is piqued—is she involved with anyone or still just dating around?—because I'd like to have a mock date with Ms. Edmunds on the receiving end of MY scorecard...a C- no doubt.

Church Lady Lied

With respect to your article entitled "Trysting the Night Away" in the February 11 issue, that described "public places to do private things," please note that the Cathedral Church, 138 Tremont St., is not the oldest Catholic church in Boston or the biggest in New England. It is not even a Catholic church but a Protestant (Episcopalian) church. The Catholic cathedral, of course, is the Cathedral of the Holy Cross on Washington Street in the South End.

Loosely Speaking

Beach blanket Bingham.

TO SAY NOTHING OF THOSE WET T-SHIRT NIGHTS AT THE PLOUGH

Baywatch Babe Traci Bingham, last cited in these pages for shaving five years off her age for promo purposes, just gets curiouser and curiouser. Two weeks ago, she was quoted on an E! program about the Miss Hawaiian Tropic beauty contest. She said she, too, had been in "bikini contests" in her "hometown" and "won them all."

Bingham was born and raised in Cambridge.

FAST FOOD RISE

Congratulations to Rene Becker, a former ink-stained wretch who traded his typewriter for a toque: His Hi-Rise Bread Co. in Cambridge, only open a year, was named by the new edition of the Zagat Survey as the Top Deli/Sandwich Maker.

BROUGHT TO YOU BY THAT MENSA CHAPTER UNDER THE GOLDEN DOME

Onlookers were aghast at the reception afforded some women who testified last month at a State House hearing on milk prices. The women, who were black, and members of an activist group called ACORN, were asked by state Rep. Stephen Kulik (D-Worthington) questions like "Did you write your own testimony?" among other such snidery.

"I covered that place for 10 years," said a lobbyist who was there, "and I never saw such debasing treatment of people appearing before the legislature. Nobody asked any of those guys in the blue suits if they wrote their own words."

HORSE WHISPERS

Kentucky Derby fans looking for a rooting interest might want to get behind Halory Hunter, a come-from-behind colt considered a top 10 contender for May's run for the roses. The thoroughbred is owned partly by Celtics coach Rick Pitino (and trained by Nick Zito, whose Strike the Gold and Go for Gin were recent Derby winners). And, as all NCAA fans know, Pitino tends to do well in Kentucky.

Pitino

OLIVES GARDEN GROWS

It'll be a while, but look for an offshoot of the popular Olives restaurant to spring up in the South End next year. The $60 million project to be built by Ron Druker in the empty lot next to the Cyclorama is said to include a new Todd and Olivia English eatery as well as Skinner auction galleries, Savenor's gourmet shop, condos and expanded quarters for the Boston Center for the Arts housed in the historic Cyclorama at the corner of Tremont and Berkeley.

NO WATERLOO YET

Reports that Napoleon's, the granddaddy of Boston gay clubs, had been sold—specifically to the owners of New York's Eighty-Eight's cabaret—are not true, say management, although the Bay Village lounge/disco, "like anything else," is for sale "at the right price."

WHY ARE WE NOT SURPRISED?

While the national press is making much of how the Wall Street bonus babies are tossing money around Manhattan nightspots faster than you can say "sell"—$10,000 bottles of wine at a pop—Boston's high-end eateries say they haven't noticed anything much different from the local financial district crowd. Although fund managers and traders did get bonuses in Boston—although certainly not on the Wall Street scale—places they frequent such as the Exchange and Aujourd'hui said they're not experiencing any swinging Chateau Margaux days. Grill 23 has seen an increase in the maximum price diners spend on classic wines like Chateau Petrus—from $300 a few years ago to $1000 today—but no increase in demand for "trophy wines."

Collins and Lilly

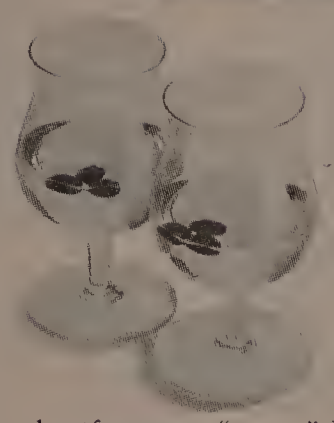
SHOULD BE QUITE A PARTY

Lori Lilly, owner of Tia's on the Waterfront, and John Collins of the Collins Group, a Boston venture capital firm, plan to marry New Year's Eve at the Ritz. Collins is on the board of directors for Fleet Bank, Beth Israel Hospital and Bentley College. Meanwhile, Tia's, which goes on hiatus during the winter, reopens April 15, just in time to celebrate filing your you-know-what.

AND FISH GOTTA SWIM

After more than 30 years on the waterfont (on both sides of Atlantic Ave.), Joe Lopez is moving his Joseph's Aquarium restaurant next month to 200 High St., the site of the former Marquee Bistro. The opening will mark the final chapter in the sad tale of the glamorous but financially over-extended Marquee, which closed last November after less than a year in business.

Meanwhile, Michael's Waterfront has vacated its location on Atlantic Ave., marking the end of an era. Michael's was the successor to the Rusty Scupper, Boston's first real dating bar, a la the Upper East Side genre, which opened on that corner in the early 1970s.



Summer

SHE WAS JUST A TAD LESS ORDINARY THAN THE REST OF US

Word is that homegal Donna Summer (née Gaines of the Roxbury Gaineses) wants to set her life story to music and take it on the road. Summer's said to be shopping for a producer for Ordinary Girl, which she hopes will end up on Broadway next year.

Finally, after all that's been said about Mount Everest and the role it's played in the death of rich thrillseekers, you can now actually go to the movies to experience the largest mountain in the world firsthand...well almost firsthand. Former IMPROPER cover subject, mountain man David Breashears, has been hard at work for years filming Everest with the colossal IMAX camera. "You don't just pick this camera and start shooting," explains the Newton native. "It takes many people to move the camera and equipment." Everest can be caught at the Mugar Omni Theater at the Museum of Science for a mere $7.50 or by calling (617) 723-2500 for more info.

Kristin Hersh Comes Home

Less than a year since she left Boston for LA, Throwing Muses' Kristin Hersh, once known as "the godmother of alternative rock," has done what she said—in an exclusive IMPROPER interview—that she was going to do. Last March, depressed over the break-up of her band, and busy packing her husband, children and household into a cross-country move, Hersh avowed she would pursue a solo acoustic career, although departing from the Muses was "heartbreaking... like a death. I brush my teeth and suddenly I'm sobbing. I look at my empty studio and I well up." She blamed the demise on the overall industry slump in 1996 as well as a glut of 'alternative rock' on the market.

Strange Angels, just released by Rykodisc, is the fruit of her labors in California. Hersh will perform at the Brattle Theater May 4-7.

Out with the old, in with the new...Remember Boston Common? Now it's ABC's turn to attempt yet another sitcom about twentysomethings in Boston. Two Guys, a Girl and a Pizza Place (Wednesday, March 11, 9:30 pm, Channel 5) follows the lives of three college pals—Pete, Berg and Sharon—and the usual, wacky supporting characters (including David Ogden "Don't Call Me Major Winchester" Spiers)...What could be more annoying than so-called-hip twentysomethings hanging around Boston? How about so-called-hip twentysomethings hanging around LA? The creators of Party of Five debut Significant Others (Wednesday, March 11, 9 pm, Channel 25), a one-hour drama centered around three long-time friends and their various bosses, siblings, etc. Henry (Scott Bairstow) is an internet porn writer. What more do you want to know?...In Living Color alums Damon Wayans and David Alan Grier, probably best remembered for their "Men on Film" sketches, are reunited on the new sitcom Damon (Sunday, March 22, 8:30 pm, Channel 25). Wayans is an undercover cop in Chicago with a wide repertoire of disguises (kind of like Fletch); Grier is his cop- wannabe brother.

SHE MAY BE LOOPY, BUT SHE CAN ACT: Maybe her off-screen life has gotten a little weird lately, but Farrah Fawcett's career had earned some respectability since her days as a Charlie's Angel. Her critical breakthrough came with 1984's made-for-TV movie The Burning Bed (Wednesday, March 11, 9 pm, Lifetime).

WHERE'S THE EXPLOITATION?: Roger Corman is known for being a lot of things: huckster, B-movie mogul, tightwad, the man who discovered Jack Nicholson, etc. But Hollywood mainstream he's not. Oddly enough, 1990's Roger Corman's Frankenstein Unbound (Friday, March 13, 8 pm, Channel 38), his first directoral effort in 20 years, seems almost ordinary. A scientist (John Hurt) travels back in time and gets involved in the Frankenstein saga. Instead of using unknown actors (which also saves money), Corman cast Hurt, a since-deceased Raul Julia, Bridget Fonda, late INXS singer Michael Hutchence and Jason Patric.

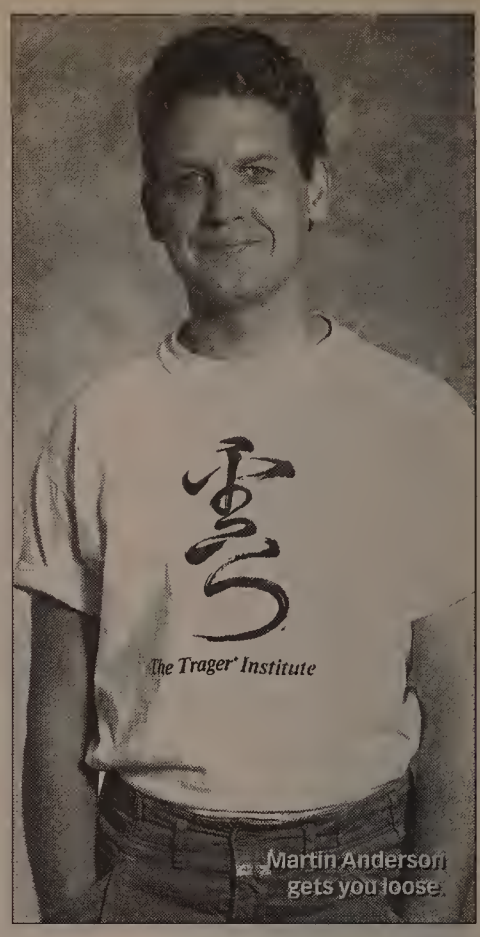
The sweet, the well-made and the unique flourish here.

Pretty Stuff

Bella Cosa, at 1319 Massachusetts Ave. in Arlington is a gift shop of many cozy pleasures, (781) 646-4655 .

LOYAL FANS OF THE OLD GIFT SHOP CINNABARS IN Cambridge, closed three years, will be relieved to learn that Jane Hurley of that store has drifted upstream to Arlington and opened a similarly friendly and serendipitous shop. Women and their afternoon-children, and also men, browse about the colorful trays splashed mad Mexican with fruits and vegetables, made of wood or papier mache, and the little painted bowls put together from recycled paper. Bella Cosa has beautiful glass plates reverse-painted with dense decoration. Looking for a non-standard wedding present, you could pick the dreamily-green frosted wine glasses with a dash of red or a zigzaggy wooden object that displays a wine bottle vertically. Many things here are made by local artists, including the big-selling stone-like earrings called "lentils," the mini-origami earrings like tiny cranes fluttering beneath your ears and ceramic hearts for the longrunning valentine.

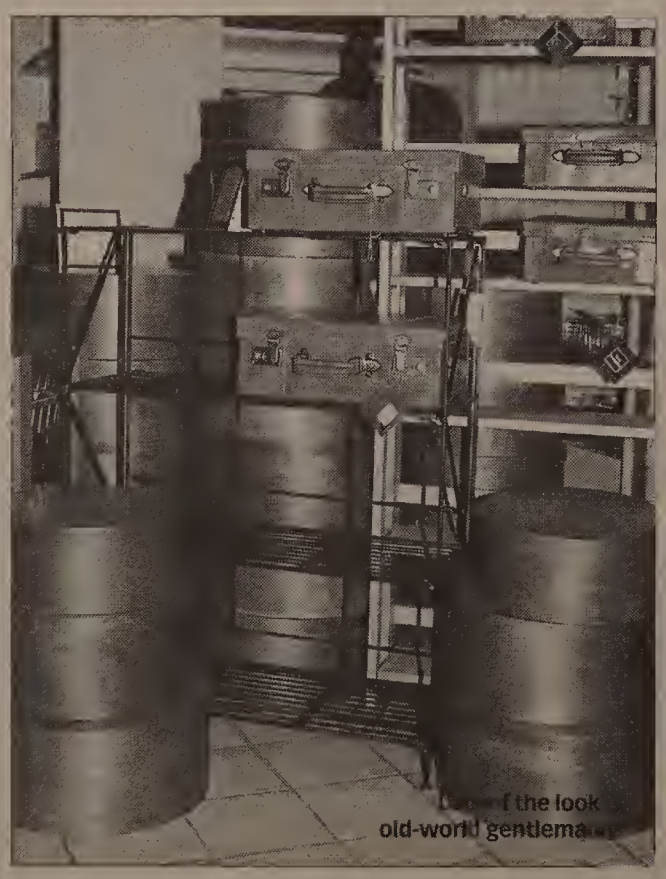


Oatmealish-looking stuffed bunnies, little crocheted baby hats and patchwork silk vests ("I can't keep them in stock") are among the sweet, the well-made and the non mass-produced fare here. In this atmosphere, the surprising appearance of Naugahyde on vests and backpacks seems almost...organic, or anyway novel.

Going Easy In The Body

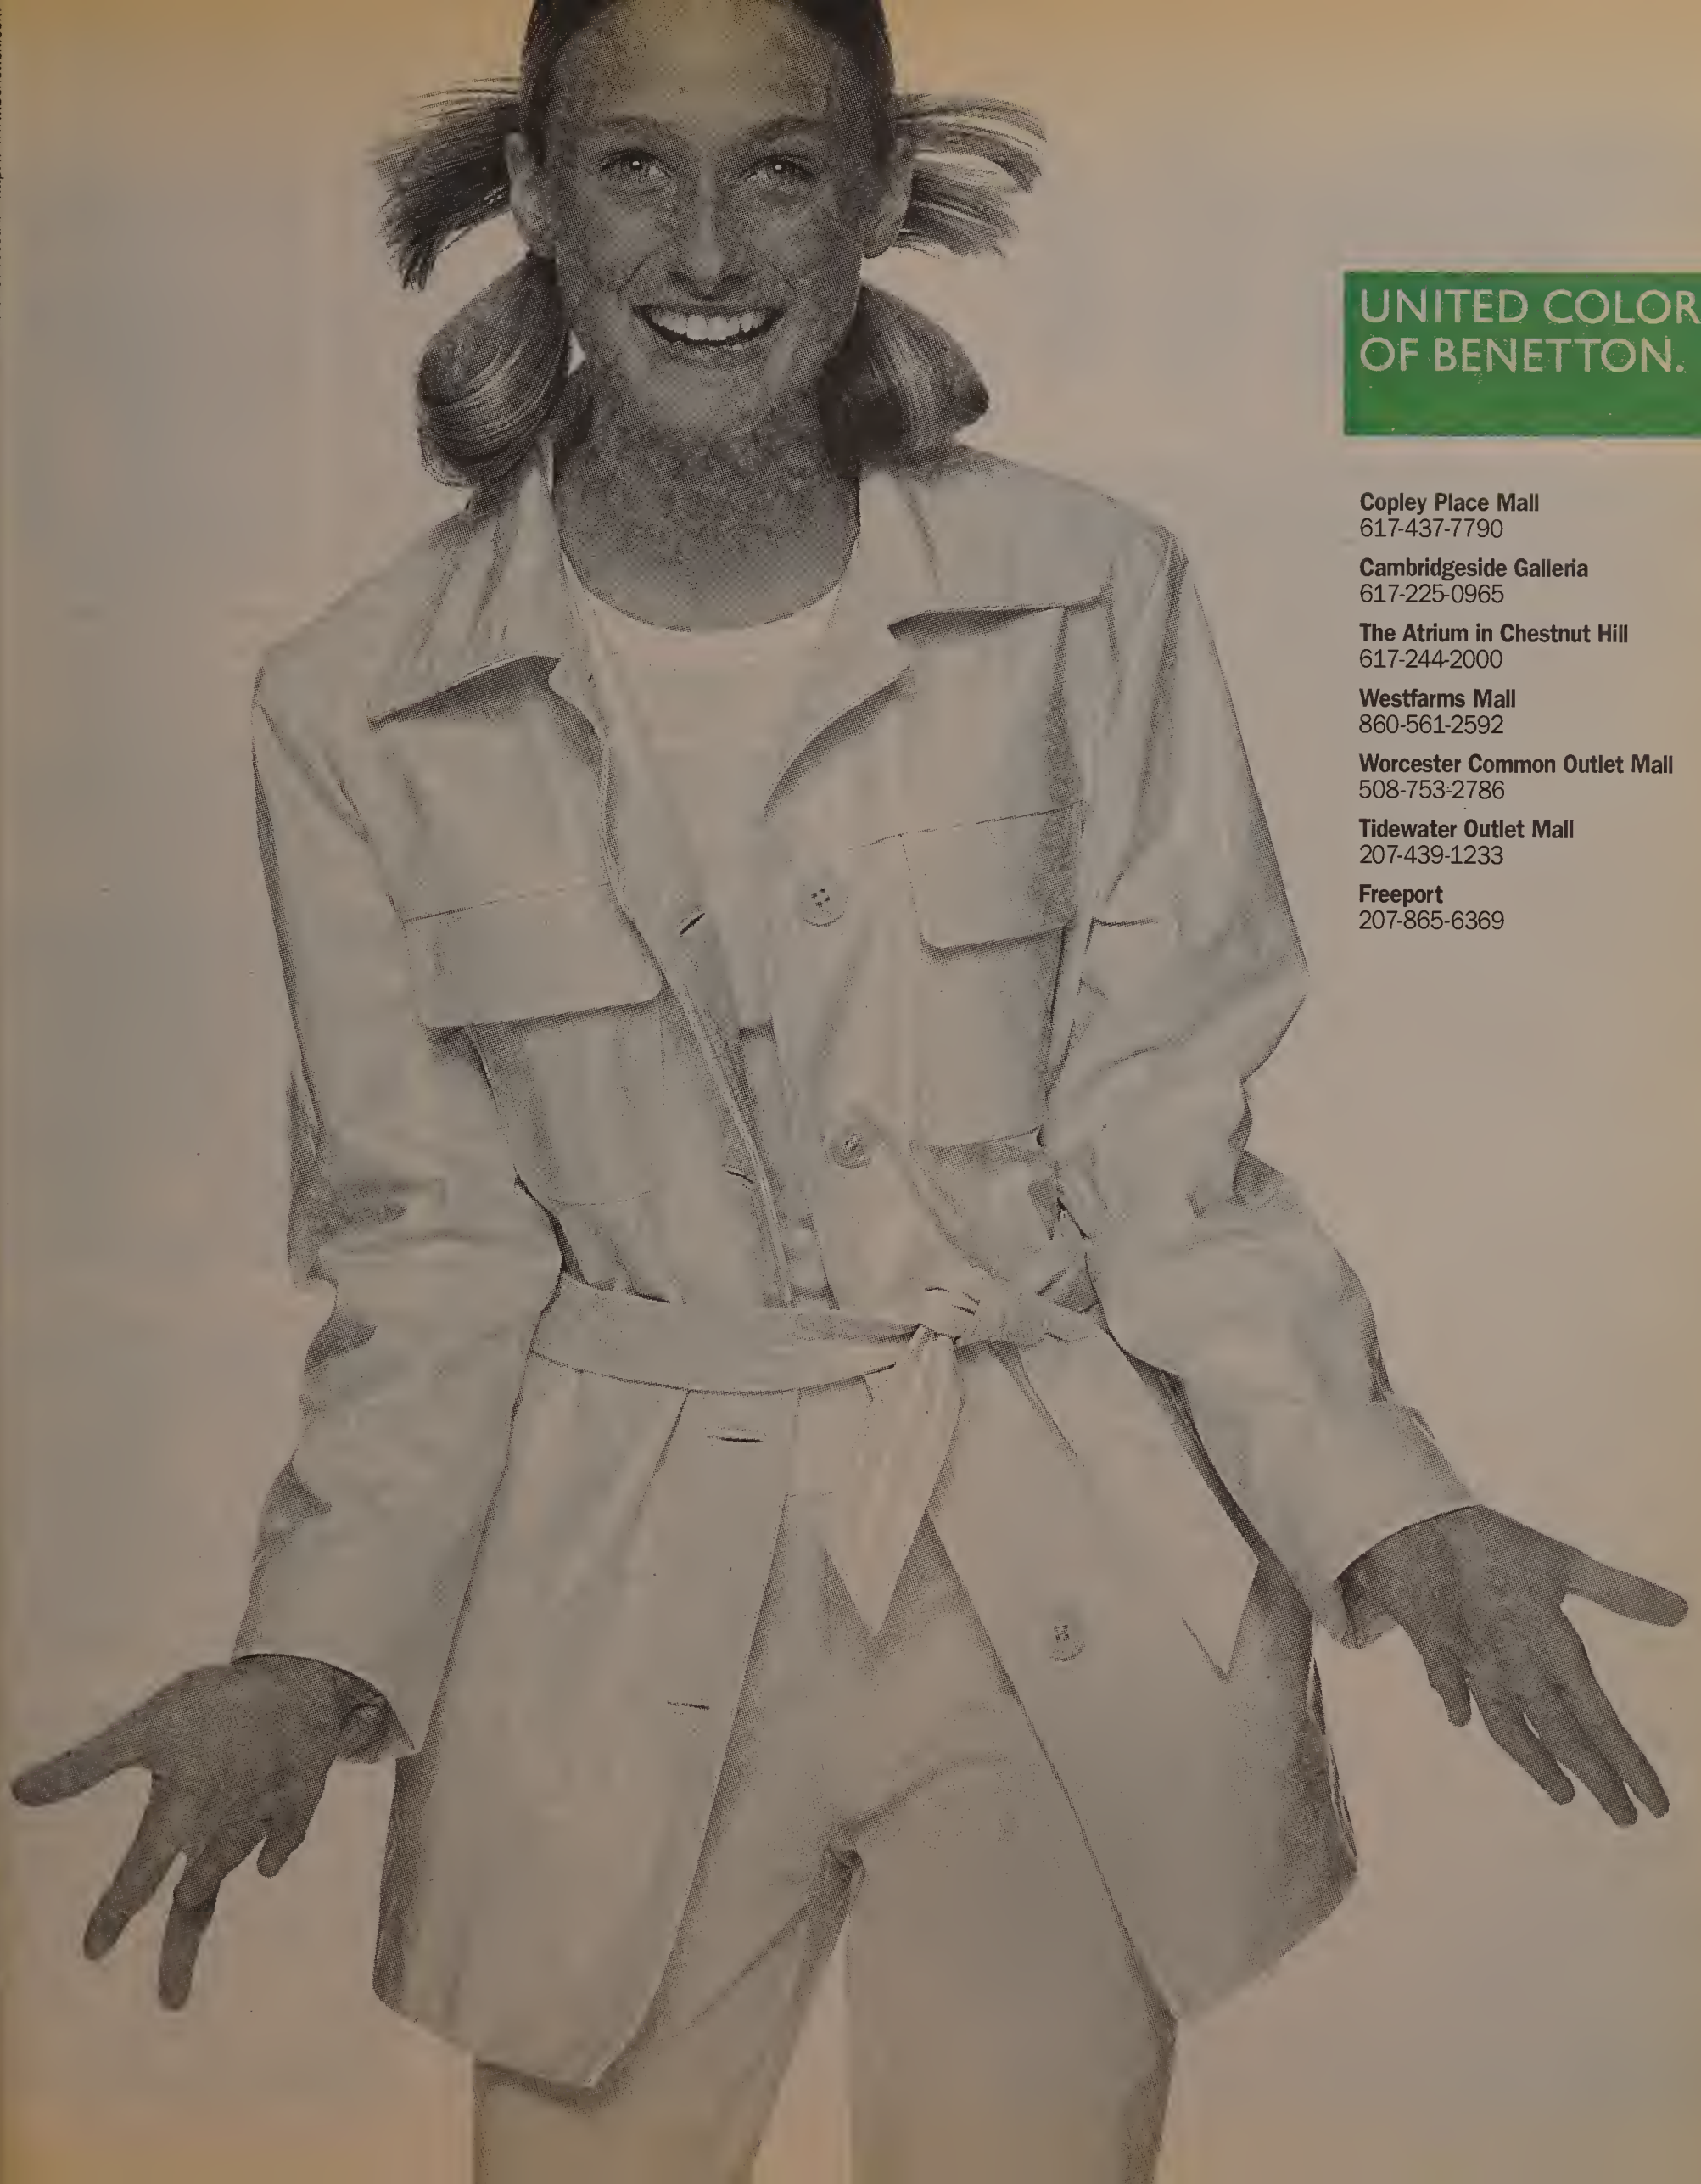
Trager Bodywork, somewhere between Alexander Technique, massage and chiropractic, brings to your body a looser, childlike ease that tight clothes and cruel sidewalks have taken away. For information call 738-0091.

IT AIN'T NO JAZZ THAT THE HEAD BONE'S CONNECTED TO THE NECK bone, and we all know that an injury in one place in the body resonates painfully elsewhere. It's like a debt-ridden guy's brother having to foot the bill. The amazingly subtle, yet pleasingly effective bodywork called Trager (after its founder Milton Trager) addresses the way we live and move in This Old Appliance—our body. The emphasis is on the internal looseness, floppiness, spaciousness we have available, and Trager's easy exercises help us to simply notice, and in noticing, to cultivate that possible ease. "What is softer?" is a question Trager practitioner and former actor Martin Anderson asks a class of people he has jouncing around the room. And pretty soon a clenched, paranoid knee begins to behave in an easier, less pounded way. Indeed, softer. A tight shoulder relents and the foot, in response, also feels looser. Little exercises, like hanging one leg off a staircase while standing on the other foot, illustrate how much letting-go and lengthening we can find hanging around in our limbs. The hands-on part of Trager involves a wonderful kind of rocking massage. People do Trager for injuries, but it's also helpful for anyone wanting "training" in finding the manifest destiny of ease that's right here at home in the body. Anderson runs workshops for cooks and others involved in repetitive tasks.



Martin Anderson gets you loose.

Calling All Pack Rats



Need stuff to hold your stuff? Hold Everything's got it all. At 1000 Massachusetts Ave. in Cambridge and 351 Newbury St. in Boston.

THE CHAOTIC NEED THESE THINGS, AND THE RETENTIVE must have them. The Hold Everything catalog that is now a store (the one in Cambridge replaced Pottery Barn) provides baskets, hatboxes, flatware-organizers and small bathroom-stuff-obsessionizers that help you be both tidy and aesthetic. Lots of the look here comes from rattan, and often it is linen-lined (displaying your mail and desk chochkes like rolls at a fancy restaurant). There are rattan baskets big enough to store a month's worth of newspapers (or Monica herself). One box made of looser-weave vines could be put upside-down over a cat in a car. The clothing-containers include a fascinating British-Colonial- looking freestanding "closet" that is draped in linen. Many of the kitchen organizers are of shiny, inexpensive stainless steel. Hold Everything sells nice wooden hangers in different shapes made for pants, suits, ties—a little Brooks Brothers of the closet. One of the big sellers is a simple, non-industrial-looking wooden table for your computer with a pull-out shelf for the keyboard. Laundry has its rolling units with cloth "white" and "color" separaters. Your most urgent hanging files can be put into places pre-marked "taxes," "electric bills" and so on. And for a hint of Titanica, little leather suitcases, and slightly bigger ones, recall a more gentlemanly past.

The unassuming little guy in action.

MOVIES

Adrenaline Rush

By Betsy Sherman

Jackie Chan's Mr. Nice Guy speaks the international language of ouch

When it's cooked up right, a Jackie Chan movie can make your spirits soar. It's a boost into a world where everything seems possible—where an unassuming little guy with a funny haircut can repel muscle-bound goons by sheer agility and strength of will. Without machine guns or Rambo knives, good guy Jackie triumphs—bruised perhaps, but with a smile on his face.

Mr. Nice Guy, more than any of Chan's recent productions, gets it right. It's not that there's anything outstandingly clever about the movie—its plot and characters are cartoonish and its humor is corny. There's simply an intrinsic glow about Mr. Nice Guy. Winningly unpretentious, it's everything you want from a movie. It's pure exhilarating thrill cinema, and should be seen on a screen, with an audience you can laugh and gasp along with.

Chan was obviously recharged by working again with Sammo Hung, who directed Mr. Nice Guy. Jackie and Sammo were child performers in a Peking Opera troupe in Hong Kong where they learned tumbling and dancing and stage-fighting and how to live with pain. The two actor-directors revitalized martial arts cinema in the post-Bruce Lee era by injecting comedy and humanizing the heroes. Hung has proven to be a skilled director of action movies that feature kamikaze stunts by his loyal team.

Mr. Nice Guy is Chan's first movie shot in English. Chan plays—no drum roll necessary—assistant to an Italian cooking show host in Melbourne, Australia. The character, Jackie, demonstrates his physical grace twisting noodles. After grocery shopping, he strolls smack into the perils of Diana (Gabriclle Fitzpatrick), a TV reporter on the run after having been discovered videotaping a deal between drug lord Giancarlo (Richard Norton) and a gang called The Demons (refugees from The Warriors). Jackie's innate reaction to help Diana gets him into a Hitchcockian mess—the bystander becomes the target. The coveted tape, mixed in with cooking show tapes, draws the bad guys into the lives of Jackie, his assistant Lakeisha (Karen McLymont) and his girlfriend Miki (Miki Lee).

Using this slender hook, Hung and Chan rush us from action setpiece to action setpiece—this is an amusement park that won't make you nauseated. Through these tests of Jackie's mettle, Chan retains a humble "why me?" body language, until his righteous anger kicks in, his sneakered foot twists into fighting stance, and the implicit "no more" is added to the film's title (bad guys go flying, but the violence isn't bloody). At the end, Jackie gets to use a monster truck to display his wrath.

Chan speaks of being inspired by Buster Keaton and Gene Kelly, and his homages are here on screen. For a modern equivalent to the joy of a Gene Kelly dance number, watch Chan effortlessly vault across mall escalators or scramble through alleys. The chase through an outdoor biker wedding culminates in Chan hanging from a huge helium-filled gorilla. A tussle with Giancarlo's suit-and-tie clad henchmen at a construction site zooms us back to the era of silent comedy. A briskly edited fight in a van should be watched by all action moviemakers. The masterpiece is the fight atop a horse-drawn carriage in the middle of traffic, with Miki as the damsel. A hurtling camera captures incredibly perilous stunts, and it's edited for maximum white-knuckle effect.

Chan conveys underdog Jackie's emotions with naturalism, even as he wows us with physical marvels. Norton is a hoot as the kingpin, as annoying as he is evil—and he's made up to look like Steven Seagal. As Diana, Fitzpatrick (lately on NYPD Blue as the receptionist) seems up for any challenge. Hung does a funny cameo as a bicyclist. Mr. Nice Guy is a movie you can pick apart for its abundant absurdities, but you'll definitely be too worn out from the adrenaline rush to do so. ✦

AD HOC

Schlocky Sells

W.B. Mason gives Staples a run for the office supplies humor category

MANY AN ADVERTISING PROFESSIONAL has made the argument that the best advertising for a New England company is for Staples. While I don't agree with that level of praise for the Staples ads (in my opinion, John Hancock and and the state's anti-smoking division routinely outdo them), I do think they constitute a very successful campaign. In fact, I still vividly remember the holiday ad a few years back that showed the man checking out what was under the tree. The gift-wrapped dog wagging its tail is one of those images that's hard to forget.

W.B. Mason competes at a fraction of Staple's budget.

What a daunting task it is, then, to create advertising in the office supplies category—advertising that will be competing for consumer's favor with Staples ads. While it's not easy, the W.B. Mason ads prove that it's not impossible, either.

While Staples ads are generally laugh-out-loud funny, W.B. Mason doesn't shy away from humor.

"Who but W.B. Mason" is the familiar slogan that the company has been using for a decade. Its ad agency, Baldwin & Stone of Cambridge, has given the company a pleasing identity through its use of nostalgia. Its TV commercials have the look of a Howard Hawks movie that might have placed Rosalind Russell at the switchboard or Fred MacMurray among the sales people. Its outdoor ads and wrapped buses have a P.T. Barnum feel. All of this manages to hearken back to "the good old days," but not in a sappy, Smuckers jelly kind of way. These ads seem to know they're on the schlocky side, but revel in that and win you over.

When you need a box of pens or computer component, pretty much the same ones are available from all the suppliers. What the W.B. Mason ads seem to achieve is giving the company a personality that makes it accessible, but also drive home the point that the service and prices will be competitive, if not better. I particularly like the image in a current TV ad that shows a salesman on the telephone covered in cobwebs, waiting for the phantom customer-service rep on the other end to take his order. The agency has a good eye for detail, giving the actor a skinny bow tie and an appropriately Dennis Day-like haircut.

One of the company's ads recently had its premiere during the Super Bowl, but don't let that fool you—W.B. Mason is competing at less than 10 percent of Staples' ad budget. Since the smaller company only operates in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, it doesn't buy national ad time the way Staples does. But estimates of spending on Mason's campaign are in the $1.5-2.5-million range. That's less than Staples spent in the month of October, according to Competitive Media Reporting.

Mason and Baldwin & Stone have been together for about 12 years, longer than Staples has even been in business. ✦

Morphine gave G. Love a big boost.

MUSIC

Gotta Love G. Love

By Paul Robicheau

From lonely gigs at the Rat to a hot Yeah It's That Easy

G. LOVE AND SPECIAL SAUCE'S MARCH 19 show at the Orpheum Theatre is quite a step from its leader's first Boston gigs in 1992, when G. Love was a 19-year-old Philadelphian transplant with a guitar and a dream.

"It's a big step for us, man," says the singer-songwriter, whose real name is Garrett Dutton, on a cell phone from his tour bus in Georgia. "My first gig was every Wednesday night at the Rat—in the loft for 30 bucks and a pitcher of beer. I used to play for nobody. One night I looked up and there was this one passed-out bum, and that was it."

On better nights at the since-closed Rat, G. Love was rewarded with drunken Red Sox fans yelling requests for Led Zeppelin. The closest thing G. Love would play was "Traveling Riverside Blues"—but the Robert Johnson original, not the Zeppelin version.

G. Love's luck improved at the Tam, where he met Special Sauce drummer Jeff Clemens, who hosted a Monday jazz jam at that Brookline club—until the fledgling combo inherited a weekly residency at Cambridge's Plough & Stars from Morphine.

"I remember Mark [Sandman] coming up to me, 'Yo, you want some gigs?' and I was like, 'Yeah, man, hook me up,'" G. Love recalls of the offer from Morphine's frontman. "So they went on the road and passed on their Monday nights at the Plough. And we built it up from the regulars to a huge line down the block. That was really where we developed our sound."

That sound was a hipster adaptation of country blues, centered by a dobro that G. Love alternated with an acoustic guitar. "The dobro was something that made me distinctive from other guitar players," says G. Love, though it first drew trendy comparisons to Beck's "Loser" and Chris Whitley. "My whole life, in music or not, I've definitely strived to be original and do my own thing, and not follow anyone else."

G. Love has truly found his creative groove on Yeah, It's That Easy, his third CD with Special Sauce—plus a cast including New Orleans king Dr. John and G. Love's Philly soul/hip-hop crew the All Fellas Band. "We recorded this new record over the course of a year and a half," he says, "so it was pretty much who I was hanging with at the time."

The disc rolls from the infectious hit "Stepping Stones" (where G. Love chants "You keep using me like a stepping stone") and hip-hoppy Philly tribute "I-76" (where a basketball breakdown includes the line "Charles Barkley dissed Larry Bird") to old-school soul tracks like "Take You There" and the folky, Dylan-style "When We Meet Again."

"Dylan and John Hammond were the most profound influences on my music," says G. Love, now 25, who also absorbed hip-hop, reggae and the Grateful Dead with his Philly friends while going to parties and dabbling in hoops, skateboarding and graffiti. "There was a time I just wanted to play blues music. But now I realize that the true me is really a person who's been exposed to all kinds of different music."

Yeah, It's That Easy also presents topical songs like "Lay Down The Law," concerning a friend's drug addiction, and "Slipped Away," about the murder of a Philly policewoman whose family lost a mother. "And the true me is a songwriter," he says, "so I just try to follow my songs."

That path for G. Love also extends back to Harvard Square, where the aspiring musician played his guitar and harmonica before taking on the Rat. He remembers the words of a veteran busker who got him started. "He said, 'Just go find yourself a corner. Maybe you'll be the next one who makes it big out here.' And I was, 'Nah, it ain't gonna be me.'" ✦

THE DISH

Julia and Marian Again

By Nini Diana

The Blue Room serves independents...Metropolis and Michelena swell

AFTER A WHIRLWIND STINT HERE FOR Boston Cooks! and commuting from San Francisco, Marian Morash, chef of WGBH's Victory Garden is returning again to town. Morash, who has been with her husband Russell, executive producer at 'GBH, while he finishes up a This Old House episode, is cooking with longtime friend, Julia Child at the Royal Sonesta in Cambridge on March 29. The ladies will be whipping up a feast to benefit Mount Auburn Hospital.

Chef Marian Morash.

The months of January and February are dreary at best. Not so for the Blue Room in Kendall Square, which has reported record sales for those months in no small part due to the popularity of the movie Good Will Hunting, starring local hunks Matt Damon and Ben Affleck. As noted by co-owner Nick Zappia, most of the independent films are released in January, just in time for Oscar contention, and this year's group has brought an above average number of patrons to the Kendall area. Unfortunately, it did nothing for the erstwhile Sazarac Grove, which is now up for sale.

If you're willing, you can make $50,000. All you have to do is come up with an original recipe including raisins and rice that serves four and send it to Christine Smith at Oldways Preservation and Exchange Trust. The deadline for the raisins and rice recipe contest has been extended to April 17. Even if your recipe doesn't win the big kahuna, there's a 10K second prize and three 5K third prizes. Remember, no one has to know that you made the recipe out of dog food, as long as it includes raisins and rice.

Rene Michelena, chef at La Bettola in the South End has been named one of Food and Wine's top 10 rising chefs. Also in the works are the James Beard Awards. The secret ballots have been circulating the desks of many of Boston's foodie heavyweights. Rumor has it that Ken Oringer of Clio is in the running for the Rising Star award. Well, he is the hardest working chef in Boston after all. Nominees will be announced officially in mid-March.

Tanjore, a new Indian restaurant in Harvard Square, is giving a new meaning to the word tapas. The word is nashtas. The best thing about them is that they are often served as late night snacks in India. It's nice to know that other cultures indulge as we do. So in the tradition of dim sum and tapas, we offer you the Indian version of small bites of food. Just enough to fill you up and make you feel like you haven't overindulged.

The Boston food community is losing one its most valuable assets. Annie Copps, project coordinator for Oldways Preservation and Exchange Trust, is leaving her position in April to pursue other interests. Copps has been instrumental in the organization of some of the city's biggest food events and the formation of Chefs Collaborative 2000. While she will remain closely tied to the community, Copps will no longer be involved in an administrative capacity, as she is eager to get back to the nuts and bolts of the food business.

Seth and Shari Woods, owners of Metropolis in the South End are opening a new restaurant this spring. The new spot, which has yet to be named, is right across the street at 569 Tremont St., a space currently occupied by Botolph's on Tremont. Just back from a trip to Paris, the Woods are taking what they learned there and applying it to their new business, incorporating French bistro food and a wine bar. ✦

Splendid Newcomer

By J. Charles Mokriski

High standards of cuisine and service at Anago would make a European hotelier proud

THE LENOX HOTEL ON EXETER STREET IN the Back Bay is often characterized as a small, charming hotel with European flair. While we are not familiar with its overnight accommodations, the style and quality of its five-month-old restaurant, Anago, certainly fit the characterization. Like its competitor Clio in the Eliot Hotel, Anago aspires to and, for the most part, sustains a high standard of cuisine and service that would make a professional European hotelier proud.

Anago is located a half block up Exeter Street from the main entrance to the Lenox on Boylston. Upon entering the blue canopied door, one climbs a few steps into a handsome space, with a high ceiling, black iron chandeliers with egg shell shades and matching sconces, walls of warm earth tones and four huge multi-paned windows, rounded at the top, with elegant white woodwork ribs.

Appointments include white linens, heavy, sumptuous tableware, comfortable red banquettes, rich blue upholstered armchairs and an open kitchen flanked by an engaging oil painting of assorted mushrooms. Tall mirrors near the front of the dining room and a glass doored wine storage facility complete the decor.

Anago's wine list is sizable, with an emphasis on the South of France, Italy and California. Unfortunately, it conforms to the Boston norm in its priciness, with few choices below $30 and none below $20. Still, there are some excellent values if one chooses wisely. We found the Falesco Vitiano, a rich blend of Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon and Sangiovese ($25) from Umbria, to be smooth bit full of flavor and body, with good tannin. A glass of a generic Sangiovese ($5) seemed heavy for this grape type and arrived in a glass appreciably smaller than the standard glasses used as Anago, in a quantity that was on the scanty side. Bread, served in attractive black wrought iron baskets, was excellent—hard crusted French baguettes one evening and rustic Tuscan loaves on another. Anago's waitstaff was polite, efficient and attentive without being obtrusive.

Anago's appetizers included Pizza Margherita, a generous 10-inch pie with superb thin crust, creamy mozzarella, chopped fresh tomatoes and tender, wilted basil leaves. Gnocchi ($9) was also a triumph—seven toothsome, tender potato rectangles in a delicate, creamy dressing with the subtle, understated flavor of Gorgonzola cheese and fresh herbs. Main courses included a fresh turbot filet ($24) with caviar buerre blanc, fingerling potatoes and savoy cabbage. While the fish was a tad overdone—we prefer it more resilient—the sauce, laced with red caviar, green herbs and watercress, was impeccable. The accompanying potatoes and cabbage were prepared to the point of perfect texture, and slivers of french fried leeks gave the dish a wonderfully crunchy counterpoint. Slow-grilled chicken ($19) was half of a large bird accompanied by rich yams, roast carrots and parsnips, and mushrooms. While the chicken was moist, tender and tasty, and the virtual garden of winter vegetables delicious, the oversized portion, which filled every centimeter of a large plate, was daunting.

Smoky pork tenderloin ($22) consisted of moist, pink pork tenderloin served with a barbecued sparerib, crisp onion rings, earthy mushrooms, pleasantly bitter spinach and spatzle in a rich dark sauce. Cassoulet of duck confit ($24) was inconsistent. The duck confit, duck preserved in its own fat, was moist, flavorful and delightfully tender, but the cassoulet's sausage was of indifferent flavor, charred, dry and tough. The assorted shell beans were succulent but sparse, which surprised us since beans are the whole point of cassoulet. All was forgiven, however, when we savored the cassoulet's robust, bacon-studded sauce.

The weakest part of Anago's program were its desserts. Their prices, ranging from $7 to $12, suggested greater merit than the kitchen delivered. "Chocolate hot and cold" ($12) was a warm chocolate shell with dark and light chocolate cream and hazelnut sauce. While the chocolate cream was superb, at once intensely chocolate and light, and its garnish of thin chocolate bark was a nice touch, the tart was dry and tough and the hazelnut sauce seemed nothing more than a thin creme anglais. Brick oven apple pudding ($8) was better, with good cinnamon and cardomon flavor and a voluptuous dollop of whipped cream, but it was nothing special at a rather aggressive price.

Up to but not including desserts, Anago is a splendid addition to the culinary resources of the Back Bay. For too long restaurants in this tony neighborhood have suffered by comparison with the eateries of the South End, its rival on the other side of the Turnpike extension. Anago, like Clio, will begin to redress this balance. ✦

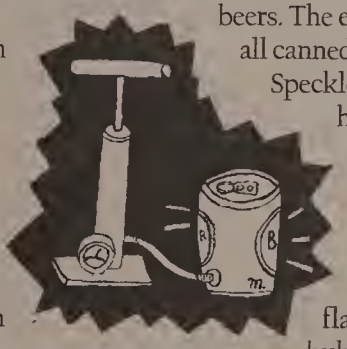
BEER

It's a Gas

By Peter R. Terhune

Nitrogenated beer makes for a smooth, creamy brew, and long-lasting head



THE LATEST BEER FAD IS A GAS. NITROGEN, to be exact—and it's unleashed a creamy tsunami that's changed beer from Dublin to Dorchester.

Nitrogenated beer has actually been with us for centuries as hand-pumped ale. Beer dispensed with air—which is 78 percent nitrogen—is smooth and has a long-lasting head. Unfortunately, oxygen spoils beer.

Guinness has long known that beer injected with a mix of nitrogen and carbon dioxide ($C0_2$) would benefit from CO_2's preservative effect and taste creamy. However, it wasn't until the early '60s and the advent of sturdy aluminum kegs that Guinness began packaging stout "gassified" with a 75 percent nitrogen/25 percent CO_2 blend. To ensure product integrity, Guinness encouraged publicans to dispense their stout using the same gas blend and a specially designed faucet. Inside the faucet is a penny-sized disk with five tiny holes; this knocks the gases out of solution, causing the beer to foam up and create a long-lasting head.

Flash forward to the late '80s. Draught Guinness is hugely popular in the UK and becoming so in the US. Guinness reasons that consumers might enjoy the flavor of draught Guinness at home and launches a product development campaign. The company's scientists test hundreds of devices before creating the "widget," a hollow plastic disk pierced with a tiny laser-cut pinhole.

It's attached to the bottom of a 16.9 oz. can, into which go 14.9 oz. of draught Guinness. Liquid nitrogen is added to the beer, and then the can lid is quickly attached. The nitrogen turns to gas and boosts the pressure in the can. This forces about one percent of those 14.9 oz. into the widget. When the can is opened, the beer in the widget streams out causing all 14.9 oz. to foam as if it were poured through a Guinness faucet.

Canned Draught Guinness debuted England in 1989 to huge success. Ditto for roll-outs in Ireland and the US. Inspired by Guinness' example, British brewer Whitbread developed its own Draughtflow aluminum floating widget (employing a dual valve system that absorbs then expels nitrogen added during packaging) to boost sales of canned bitter. Boddington's was the first Whitbread brand to receive the Draughtflow treatment—sales were staggering. Other British brewers followed suit. Today, canned bitter sales are up, dozens of "nitro" beers crowd retailers shelves and brewers produce keg versions of nitro beers so people can get that same smooth taste at the pub.

Guinness, Whitbread and other British brewers are exporting the nitro revolution to our shores, while domestic brewers like Samuel Adams (Boston Cream Ale), Pyramid (DPA) and Rhode Island's Emerald Isle Brew Works (Emerald Isle Brown Ale) have also joined the fray. In my experience, draft nitro beer is fuller-flavored and holds its gas better than the canned version. Some standout nitro drafts include Usher's 1824, Old Speckled Hen and the big G.

My brother Charlie and I recently sat down and sampled nine canned nitro beers. The experience proved that not all canned nitro beers are equal. Old Speckled Hen and Abbot Ale got high marks for a pleasing combo of malt and yeast flavors. From the $15 Whitbread four-pack, Fuggles delivered a pleasing earthy hop aroma and flavor; Boddington's had a bubble gum aroma but nice maltiness; Castle Eden and Flowers possessed a yeast aspect not unlike stilton cheese. Mansfield, a nitro beer sans widget, lost its head and gas quickly. Lastly, in the battle of the stouts, Murphy's delivered a brash roastiness, but played second fiddle to Guinness' subtlety and depth. For their generosity with samples, many thanks go to the Craft Brewers Guild and Cambridge's Liquor World. ✦

KISS MY WALLET

Products that are easy on Mother Nature... and Papa's bank account.

When you find grooming aids that work just as well as (and sometimes better than) expensive brands, you feel proud for not getting hustled. Well, smart shoppers, get ready to beam. I've found a line of primping products that cost close to nothing and work like gangbusters. The nature-lovin' Kiss My Face line has been around for 20 years, cranking out economical, eco-friendly goodies since the days most of us thought recycling meant riding your bike twice. Here are their offerings that met with tester approval:

What smooth skin you boys and girls will have after shaving with Kiss My Face Moisture Shave! An herbal, non-aerosol cream, it gives your whiskers a real mowing without irritating your delicate mug, and it won't clog the razor like most cream shave products. Choose from four varieties at around four bucks a tube.

Readers suffering from muscle aches, cramps or flu symptoms should add Kiss My Face's Cold And Flu Bath and Shower Gel to a steaming tub and hop in. This potion is loaded with eucalyptus and echinacea root—a perfect alternative to pill popping for relieving pain and strain. Sixteen ounces will set you back $8.95.

If your armpits feel clogged with toxic deodorants, take a pit stop and give your underarms a chance to breathe. KMF's Liquid Crystal and Active Enzyme deodorants roll on clear and get rid of B.O. without clogging the pores. Perfect for casual days when your crevices need a rest but you wouldn't dare be naked-pitted, these deodes cost around five smackers.

One luxury liner tester says the Facial Alpha Hydroxy 8% worked better on her whole body than her department store AHA moisturizer, and was a heck of a lot cheaper. And the primping panelists and I love Kiss My Face's liquid soaps.

Kiss My Face products are available at health food stores and mass market retailers like Walgreens or CVS. To be sure of a broad selection, head over to Bread and Circus, GNC stores or Harnett's in Harvard Square.

PLAYDATE WITH PIA

Let's get together and chick-chat about makeup and grooming. For two days this month I will be at Neiman Marcus in Copley Place, talking one on one with you readers about your favorite subject—yourselves—and your makeup and skin care needs.

By appointment only on Friday, March 20, and Saturday, March 21, from 12 to 6 pm. Call (617) 536-3660 X2100 to reserve your time slot. I can't wait to see your gorgeous faces! P.S. This is free.

Laura Mercier

A non-caking, undetectable, but hard-core concealer from Laura Mercier.

Feeling green under the gills after a night of Saint Paddy's celebrating? Or maybe your lack of sleep is giving you Anna Magnani dark circles that no concealer can hide? Well, my lil' leprechaun, have I got some elfin magic for you! Long a favorite of Hollywood party-hounds who must look sweet on set after wee hours at the Viper Room, Laura Mercier's Secret Camouflage offers the most intense coverage that my squad of Boston investigators found in two solid years of concealer testing.

To facilitate the custom blending needed for covering that pesky pimple or those unsightly spider veins, each Secret Camouflage compact contains two shades. Snow Whites, Black Beauties and all those in between will find the tints of their choice among the various combinations offered. Look for Laura Mercier's moisture-packed, impeccable Secret Camouflage at Neiman Marcus or Saks for a very reasonable $24.

No matter what concealer you are using, these tips will keep your eyes out of the black:

- Use the back of your hand as a palette when mixing shades. Avoid that heavy, caked-on newscaster look by applying concealer with a super soft cosmetic sponge—not your fingertips. Beware of putting too much around the eyes; it can build up in the crow's feet. Thin out cakey concealer with a dab of facial moisturizer before you apply it.
- Match your concealer to your foundation to avoid that too-light look. To correct a case of Casper white eyes, brush some blush over the bright area. And, before you go buying any concealer, TRY SLEEPING MORE!

Newbury Street Hairstyling At Grub Street Prices

Looking for a high-end Newbury Street salon hair cut or color, but don't want to pay the insultingly high prices? Mitchell John Salon is the answer. I have had my eye on this Broad Street shears wizard and his associates for a few years now, and I gotta say the quality of their cuts and color beats out many of the clip joints on the Newb.

Mitch is the master of the sexy, wash and go cut. Instead of fighting your cowlicks, he works with them till you are mooing with pleasure. His styling flavor has delighted more than 20 of my female investigators.

After too many years on the Street of Dreams, Valerie, Mitch's colorist associate, has found a home for her skillful, realistic shadings in this pretension-free environment. And Monrüd, a tall and handsome Scandinavian dude, produces today's now and wow coifs to perfection.

It's refreshing to see a super high-quality salon with haircuts starting at $35. Depending on your hair length, a snip session with Mitch or Monrüd runs from 60 to 70 bucks.

Mitchell John Salon is located at 67 Broad St. Call (617) 951-0122 for an appointment—an initial consultation is always free. And tell 'em Pia sent you!

Soroff/On ANTHONY CLARK

ANTHONY CLARK WAS BORN AND RAISED IN GLADYS, VA., BUT ADOPTED Boston as his home when he came here to study acting at Emerson. As a student, he won the "College Entertainer of the Year" award, and then went on to become one of Boston's best-loved stand-up comics. His film credits include The Rock and Dogfight, and he's appeared on Leno, Letterman and Rosie O'Donnell, as well as doing guest spots on series like Ellen and starring on Broadway in The Grapes of Wrath. His first sitcom, Boston Common, lasted only a season, but he can now be seen playing a priest, opposite Dan Aykroyd, on Soul Man.

Jonathan Soroff: What's your favorite expletive?
Anthony Clark: I try not to curse, but it would have to be the f-word.
JS: You're playing a priest on TV. Do you go to church?
AC: Not regularly, but I still believe there's something powerful up there. I grew up in the Thomas Road Baptist Church, where Jerry Falwell is the head pastor.
JS: Holy Shit!
AC: (Laughs) Maybe that should be my favorite expletive. Can I switch?
JS: Sure. So did you cry when Boston Common got canceled?
AC: No. It was sort of a relief. Carrying a sitcom is incredibly stressful.
JS: Ever take a leak on the real Boston Common?
AC: Many times. Walking through the park late at night, trying to make it home to Beacon Hill....
JS: What's the worst job you ever had?
AC: I worked for Montilio's Bakery in Faneuil Hall. I was counter help, and I'd come home smelling like coffee and pastries. It wasn't pleasant, and my boss was, ummm, not very polite.
JS: She was a leviathan?
AC: I don't know what that means, but it sounds right.
JS: What was her name?
AC: I can't recall, but I do remember I had to wear a hair net. I thought, "Well, at least I'll look fancy."
JS: When you worked with Sean Connery in The Rock, did you make any James Bond jokes?
AC: No. He's a little intimidating.
JS: OK, Emerson students and attention-seeking three-year-olds. Any similarity?
AC: Absolutely. Emerson is basically an East Coast freak magnet, and they don't disappoint. When I was there, punk was in, and people really uglied themselves up, with pins through their noses and all that.
JS: What's the stupidest thing you've ever done?
AC: Wow. That's a daily event. I guess maybe the time I crashed a car in Boston and didn't stay until the police arrived. Let's leave it at that. They might still be on the lookout.
JS: Tell me a secret about Dan Aykroyd.
AC: He's having a baby.
JS: Are Boston drivers better than the drivers in L.A.?
AC: Yes. If you can drive in Boston, you can drive anywhere.

JS: What do you miss most about Boston?
AC: It's small enough that everybody kind of knows each other. I still have a house in the South End, although I'm not there much.
JS: What's the address, so our readers can stalk you?
AC: I forget.
JS: What's the best gig you've ever done?
AC: I performed for the President last weekend, which gave me an opportunity to put on a tux, and afterward, we had dinner at the White House.
JS: Really? What did you steal?
AC: (Laughs) Nothing. The place was crawling with cops. Believe me, I looked around. I was thinking, "I gotta get an ashtray," but no dice.
JS: What's your favorite sexual position?
AC: What do you call the normal one? Missionary? I'm not that eclectic in bed.
JS: When was the last time you lost your temper in public?
AC: Well, I almost got into a shoving match with David Copperfield at the White House.
JS: Explain please.
AC: There's been bad blood between us for a while. He thinks it's over Claudia Schiffer, but it's solely that I hate magic.
JS: Do you bite your nails?
AC: Yes.
JS: Smoke?
AC: I'm quitting this week.
JS: And go through the rest of your life being known as a quitter?
AC: Better than being known as a cancer patient.
JS: Does putting a baseball cap on backward instantly lower someone's IQ?
AC: It pumps up their hip-hop sensibility and increases street cred.
JS: This is sort of philosophical, but why are anvils so common in cartoons, when you never see one in real life?
AC: I'm not real sure. I think maybe the cartoon people cornered the market, but they've provided hours of entertainment for small children.
JS: Is Spam the work of the devil?
AC: No. It's probably just the work of General Foods.
JS: An internet search for your name brings up 378,597 matches, but one is a power-lifting exercise guru. Any relation?
AC: No, but I saw him! He's awesome. Y'know, on the net, there's all these pictures, but you don't know where they come from, and I said "I'm pretty sure I never power-lifted before," so I clicked on him and burst out laughing.
JS: The people who make up names for the colors of clothing in catalogs—do they deserve the death penalty?
AC: No. Sometimes Burnt Sienna is funner than Orange.
JS: Any plans to appear on Baywatch?
AC: I auditioned, and I still have my fingers crossed. Other than the fact that I can't swim, and I'm hooked on Phonics, I think there's a chance.
JS: If the camera adds 20 pounds, how can Courtency Cox still be alive?
AC: Crack? I don't know. I'm not friends with the Friends. ✦

MAGGIE TRICHON

STAYING

Salute To Surviving A Quarter Century Or More On Boston's Boulevard Of Dreams. BY KRISTEN BISSON

"Urban disaster" is an expression used frequently to describe the last few blocks of Newbury Street, in the days long before the mighty mighty Tower commandeered the corner. In the 1960s and '70s, "Petticoat Row"—the first block of Newbury from A to B, where the upper-crust coterie of Yankee furriers and jewelers huddled by the Ritz—contrasted sharply with the sometime painted ladies and chalk body outlines decorating the sidewalks of the nether end. For most of this century, Newbury did not exist as a commercial venue past Dartmouth Street. By the '60s, the largely residential Back Bay had been in decline for several decades, the '50s witnessing mansions along Beacon and Commonwealth converted into rooming houses, having been inherited by families who couldn't afford the upkeep. Townhouses could be purchased at the time for $10,000 to $20,000, often fully furnished with antiques—investments that began to pay off with the burgeoning demand for commercial space in the 1970s and the retail kaboom of the '80s.

Considering how many venues exist today on Boston's most decorated thoroughfare, there are relatively few old timers who've been around long enough to observe at close range the street's metamorphosis from small-time to uber fabulous. We tip our hats to them. Many took a risk by setting up shop in the late '60s, early '70s, having been told they were crazy for thinking they could make it in such an environment. How sweet to have proved the dubious wrong.

For sure, it's become a lot harder to survive on the street with the most expensive retail space in Boston. Everyone wants to talk about the skyrocketing rents, the advent of national chains moving in, small business owners moving out. All have observed the birth and death of multitudes of short-lived retail dreamers who've set up shops with high hopes of success and left with little in their pockets. Many of the stalwarts readily admit they might have departed long ago were it not for owning their spaces; others, who've been leasing for two decades, invariably compliment their landlords for keeping prices affordable. Still others are new owners who've bought old businesses and stayed true to both the name and legacy of the original owners. A look back at their collective stories reveals much about Boston history.

ALIVE

PHOTOGRAPHS BY KATHY CHAPMAN

MAGGIE INC. (35 Newbury St.)

Maggie Trichon moved to Boston from New York in the early '70s, "wandered onto Newbury Street," and promptly fell in love. "It was the coolest street then," says the owner/founder of modeling agency Maggie, Inc., "and it's still the coolest street." The grandniece of famed photographer Man Ray, with a family background in the garment business, Trichon founded A.R.T., a modeling agency and talent payment service, at 69 Newbury, with two partners. Having decided a decade later to focus solely on the modeling agency half, Trichon split the business in two and "one Friday the models and I picked up and moved down here." At one point in the early '80s, according to Trichon, all the modeling agencies—there were three—and most of the photographers were on Newbury. "Imagine the kind of energy that was here," she says, before escalating rents and not enough space drove many off the street. Maggie's offices overlook Akris and Ann Taylor, but when she leans over the balcony you can tell she's seeing what used to be there. Bonwit Teller (where Louis Boston is now) "was a magnificent store, every other shop was a furrier, and 29 [Newbury] was the English Tea Room where old Boston ladies lunched." For Trichon, Newbury is a lot more sophisticated than it used to be, and, "thank god, not as conservative."

HALEY & STEELE (91 Newbury St.)

Not long ago, Haley & Steele owner Julien Tavener received a call from a customer whose engraving had slipped in its frame and needed repair, come to find out it had been purchased in the 1930s. Tavener promptly repaired the piece as though it had been three years instead of 60, proof of his respect and enthusiasm for the store's legacy. Haley & Steele were young men at the turn of the century who began importing and selling European decorative engravings off carts at the intersections of Boylston and Arlington Streets, and Newbury and Arlington, before opening a store on St. James Street in 1907. From there the story gets a bit muddy: No one's quite sure if Steele died or went into the insurance business; in either case Haley was left to carry on, establishing a profitable carriage trade and moving to Newbury in 1948. In '79 the Haley family sold the business to a group of private investors, who resold it to Tavener in 1992. Tavener was no stranger to the shop. "I grew up coming to Haley & Steele," says Tavener, as his father for years managed the American arm of English art dealers Frost & Reed, and was a frequent customer. "It's strange to be part of something old," says Tavener. "Its embodiment is bigger than the people who work in it. It's in the air." Indeed, the shop has an old world feel one senses the minute the door buzzer grants access inside. "People come in and out of the life of the company," says Tavener, like a man who popped in one day and said, "Hey I used to work for you as a guilder when you were on St. James."

THE TRAVIS RESTAURANT (135 Newbury St.)

Next time you breeze in and out of the Travis Restaurant for a cheeseburger and a coffee, or, if you're smart, an old fashioned lime rickey, check out the wonderful collection of photographs Leo Travis hangs behind the counter, one of a 19-year-old Travis astride a motorcycle in his army days, plus the likes of old regulars Michael Dukakis, onetime Ritz chef Jean-Yves Loizance and David Brudnoy, who's been coming in every day for years. This is the same counter behind which Travis used to man the grill wearing a bow tie. The restaurant has been a favorite neighborhood hangout since it opened in 1962, after Travis left 14 years as general manager of the cafeteria at the Watertown Arsenal, where his dad was a chef. In the mid-'60s Travis was the first to put tables out on the sidewalk, and he tells a great story of the commotion that ensued when the owners of a dress shop called the Snooty Fox sent a policeman down to complain to Leo that he, Leo, had been dozing outside at one of his tables on a break. Two weeks earlier, Travis had put out a couple of tables as a test, and the incident with the gendarme did give him pause. Ultimately, he said the hell with it, put out a dozen tables and voila!—the successful birth of the first sidewalk cafe on Newbury. Longtime Newbury Street denizens wax nostalgic about the days when Travis and Maynard Winston would sit outside in the summer afternoons playing gin rummy. Leo's got a photo of that too.

PUCKER GALLERY (171 Newbury St.)

A wedding present of $300 landed Bernie and Sue Pucker in the art business. Sue's aunt told them to "buy yourselves a painting" with her gift. Instead, after careful consideration, they purchased eight pieces of art from Safrai Gallery in Jerusalem, where they were living at the time. From that point they were hooked. "All things considered, it was the worst idea possible," says Bernie of opening Pucker Gallery in 1967 at the age of 29 with no experience or credibility, in a space fully one story below street level. Plus, few shoppers wandered farther up the street than Dartmouth where the predecessor to Joe's American Bar & Grill, Joseph's Restraunt, used to reside. Pucker remembers people strolling the additional half-block up to him and remarking, "My dear, I don't believe I've ever been above Joseph's." "It was luck and timing," says Bernie, of the extraordinary growth of the street and interest in art among the middle class. In the gallery's first year, sales totaled $24,000; on a recent Saturday approximately $35,000 worth of art sold out the door. On any given day at Pucker, you'll find an eclectic collection of everything from a Picasso etching to Japanese pottery by Shima Oka, considered by the Japanese to be a national living treasure. "Having a gallery is really like whipped cream," a rich experience, says Pucker, who has always operated on the premise that he won't sell anything he wouldn't want to own himself, regardless of its market value.

BAUER WINES (330 Newbury St.)

When general manager Howie Rubin arrived on Bauer's doorstep in 1980, he was fresh from grape picking in Napa Valley and a stint as sommelier at the Breakers in Palm Beach. "I answered an ad," says Rubin, "and liked the way Bauer did business." The popular neighborhood packie had been on Newbury since 1965 in several different locations. Though Bauer retired and sold the business to Sue Fortuna in 1985, he still talks to Rubin on the phone frequently. Over the years Bauer attracted a loyal following among the Back Bay crowd, and other local neighborhoods, delivering as far as the North Shore to family names like Cabot and Forbes. Since '85, Rubin's tripled the store's volume, humorously claiming to move more boxes per square foot than anybody else on the street. He prefers doing business the old fashioned way: chatting with customers, teaching them about wine, even offering rides home on occasion if the store van is free. Rubin's had pretty good luck in that regard: His wife was a regular customer for 12 or 13 years before he attended one of her dinner parties and never left. Another of Rubin's favorite stories concerns Spooky the cat, the store's sole tenant. It seems she had a fondness for sitting in the window at the old store, which one summer featured a beach theme replete with beach ball, sun chair and sand. It wasn't till the end of the season that Rubin realized the cat had been using the sand as her litter box. "A customer came in one morning," he remembers, "and said, 'Man, I was kind of wasted last night walking down the street, but I could have sworn I saw a cat going to the bathroom in your window.'"

DORFMAN JEWELERS (24 Newbury St.)

"A lot of people have sat in that chair," remarks Sumner Dorfman, ensconced in the plush digs of Dorfman Jewelers, from across the table where checks for $300,000 jewels are written. Who could doubt that, with Dorfman's reputation for having the finest high quality gems and best diamonds in Boston. The 63-year-old business begun by Sumner's father David occupied what's now FAO Schwarz before moving to its current nook across from the Ritz in 1971. It's seen various incarnations over the years, originally a "mini Shreve's" selling china, silver and glass as well as precious jewelry. Barbara Dorfman remembers fondly installing a Mark Cross boutique in the back half of the store for leather luggage and pocketbooks in the '70s. The husband and wife team have been running the business together for more than a quarter century, working full-time in the store and traveling extensively three times a year to the Far East and Western Europe, looking for the rarest of gems. They've watched the street grow up, their clientele transforming over the years from 100 percent Boston-based to a now diverse national and international group, especially in the last few years, says Barbara. The Dorfmans are understandably close-mouthed about their customers but yes, of course there have been celebrities, heads of state, Indonesian princesses and the like.

DE LUCA'S MARKET (239 Newbury St.)

"I didn't know a Bordeaux from a Barolo," says Virgil Aiello of starting a wine business at De Luca's on Charles Street in 1970, "but I certainly do now." Aiello and brothers Gerald and Robert run both De Luca's on Beacon Hill and Newbury Street. De Luca was their mother's maiden name. Her brother Joseph came to Boston from Italy after World War I, and started working at the market, then called Giuffre's, in 1919. It soon became Giuffre/De Luca's, and then just De Luca's. Virgil Aiello Sr. bought the store from his uncle in 1952 and literally provided the family manpower to keep it going. The Aiello brothers bought the Newbury Street space in 1973. The European flair of these neighborhood favorites who purvey specialty meats, cheese and caviar is no accident. Virgil has photo albums of meat counters all over Europe, taken on business/pleasure trips in seek of internationally famous markets like Peck's in Milan and Fouchon's of Paris. These efforts are not lost on De Luca's patrons, some of whom have been coming in for years—first as singles, then parents, now empty nesters; customers come from all points on the economic spectrum. "You don't have to buy caviar to get good service," says Virgil. "What's fun is trying to make it so everyone feels comfortable coming here." Everyone including a couple, trying to be incognito, who snuck in early one morning for coffee and muffins. "Look, Virgil," said an employee, "it's Johnny Depp and Kate Moss. "Who?" said Aiello."

C. TALANIAN REALTY (176 Newbury St.)

"Have toolbox, will travel" is how Back Bay real estate magnate Charles Talanian describes his youth working for his dad renovating buildings with "clanging banging heat systems and rattly windows," buildings the elder Talanian bought and sold in the 1960s and '70s. For nearly two decades, the company consisted of father, son and secretary. The son of Armenian immigrants, Charles Talanian Sr. was eking out a living working for a Beacon Hill real estate company in the late '40s, when a last minute end-of-the-tax-year sale of the Goodspeed's Bookshop building earned him enough cash to buy and sell his first property on Marlborough Street, making a $1000 profit. "It was the Gold Coast," says Talanian of the 1950s real estate market. In the late '60s, early '70s Talanian was busy fulfilling requests for commercial space on Newbury. Today, he owns more square footage on the street than anyone else and has seen it all: like the burglary crazed 70s when thieves would take cabs to brownstones on Commonwealth Avenue, double park and leave with whatever loot they could carry. No one can deny that landlords get a bad rap these days: "You can't get greedy in this business," says Talanian, explaining his rule of thumb is watching the economy over his shoulder, knowing the market rate and leaving room for others' mistakes, as Newbury Street is notorious for attracting overzealous, unprepared investors eager to become Newbury Street boutique material.

PRISCILLA OF BOSTON (137 Newbury St.)

Priscilla of Boston has been adorning Boston's brides to be in tulle and satin for 52 years. Priscilla C. Kidder commandeered the business for almost 50 years from its humble beginnings on Washington Street in 1945 to the heydays of the 1960s and '70s when Grace Kelly's bridesmaids wore Priscilla's gowns as did White House brides, the Nixon daughters and Luci Johnson. Priscilla, who moved her headquarters to Newbury Street more than 40 years ago, earned her fame first by custom-making one of a kind dresses, then establishing a successful manufacturing business selling to department stores in the '70s. Today, the Boston store is the flagship of five stores around the country.

Current owner Patricia Kaneb purchased the business from Priscilla in 1993; at 30 years old she had a background in retail and commercial banking as well as a longtime interest in the company since a friend had worked in the store as an intern in college. Kaneb takes pride in the fact that all work is done in much the same fashion as 50 years ago—by hand and with Singer sewing machines at the same factory in Charlestown; some of her seamstresses have been with the company for 40 years. Even the clientele displays continuity, Kaneb notes, those mothers who wore white-hot Priscilla gowns in the '60s and '70s are now accompanying their daughters to the boutique where, for them, it all started.

DIEGO SALON (143 Newbury St.)

A haircut and blow-dry was considered radical in 1965 when hair styling doyen Diego opened his first salon, The Loft, on Newbury Street. The era of rollers was about to end. Diego had started sneaking over at 14 years of age to watch his cousin cut hair. "Are you kidding?" quips the stylist, "in those days you'd get your head kicked in for wanting to be a hairdresser." By 1971, he was Boston's version of Beatty in Shampoo, garnering attention from the likes of Women's Wear Daily in a salon climate that had suddenly inspired pretension the likes of "my hairdresser" vs. "your hairdresser." Another salon followed in the early '70s in Harvard Square, and then a side career under the bright lights of TV cameras as the hair styling director for the personal care division of Gillette Co., overseeing the casting and styling of models for Gillette's commercials. To a certain extent, you might call Diego the granddaddy of the overwhelming plethora of salons now crowding the street, many of today's salon owners having cut their teeth—make that hair—at The Loft. Though Diego's officially retired these days having sold his businesses three years ago, you can still find him snipping away every other Tuesday on Newbury for both new and old clientele.

VOSE GALLERIES OF BOSTON (238 Newbury St.)

Twin brothers Terry and Bill Vose, of the very old, very exclusive Vose Galleries at 238 Newbury, are the fifth generation of Voses to run the family business, which has been operating in the Back Bay for 101 years. "There was a time when if someone called and asked for Mr. Vose," says Terry, "there were five Mr. Voses on the premises." Theirs is a rich and colorful history of masterpieces stolen and recovered, and high teas served to boost business during the Depression. The Voses estimate they've sold 33,000 paintings over the last hundred years—the likes of Rembrandt, Parish, Hassam, etc. At any given time, there are about 800 paintings on the premises, many hidden behind the plush velvet curtains lining the walls. In 1962 Vose Gallery relocated to Newbury from upper Boylston Street, what is now Boston Sports Club—Terry quips, "Sometimes I find myself doing aerobics in my grandfather's showroom." Their father Robert Vose Jr. had decided he'd had it with commuting to work and converted a townhouse into a gallery with living quarters above, as it remains today. His father Robert Vose Sr., sternly declared at the time, "You'll never make a living in a place like this." Terry Vose attributes some of the family's success to the seriousness with which they regard their work: For years his father opened the gallery at 6:55 am on the dot, everyone in attendance, Monday through Friday. Since he retired in '88, that's been amended. These days it's 7:25 sharp.

JUDI ROTENBERG GALLERY (130 Newbury St.)

You can tell Judi Rotenberg's been in the art business for quite some time the way she easily hoists her gallery's signature large, colorful paintings in the air and holds them patiently for your perusal. And for good reason, as she grew up surrounded by art, the daughter of the well-respected landscape painter Harold Rotenberg. Rotenberg is a big name in town. Judi's mother Faye was an early proponent of Newbury Street, and brother Jon is the director emeritus of the Newbury Street League. Rotenberg opened her own gallery/studio space on Newbury Street in 1971, selling her paintings for $100 each. It was difficult to paint and sell simultaneously, but she kept at it, developing both a distinctive style and clientele, and now sells living artists' works (still at nice prices) to customers all over the country and as far as Switzerland and Germany. In the '80s she watched many of her colleagues move their galleries off Newbury to the South End and Fort Point Channel areas, proclaiming Newbury Street moribund. They were going to establish a new Boston art mecca. Those same people came straggling back soon after, many subsequently going out of business. Rotenberg has always remained staunchly loyal to the Street. "My mother would be happy to see Newbury Street today," says Rotenberg. "She fought very hard to keep up the quality. One must guard a treasure like this."

CHILDS GALLERY (169 Newbury St.)

The story of Charles Childs is akin to Horatio Alger. When Childs was 15, his father died and the boy gave up dreams of going to Harvard and even finishing high school, and went to work at Goodspeed's Bookshop. Charles Goodspeed said to him, "Son, you may not get a Harvard degree, but we'll see you get a good education," and promptly took the boy under his wing. In 1926, Childs was the head of the print department of the antiquarian bookshop. He went on to open his own gallery in 1937 next door to its current location, where he relocated seven years later. Childs' vision was to sell art he felt was overlooked and undervalued, not necessarily by art historians, but by the general public and market of the day. Current owner Roger Howlett swears by the same principles. Howlett landed on the scene in 1970, fresh from Yale, a year after Childs had sold his business to Carl Crossman, with whom Howlett was partners until Crossman's retirement in 1983. Today Childs Gallery has one of the largest inventories in the world, with 40,000 to 50,000 pieces on hand at any given time, a combination of oil paintings, prints and sculpture from 1850 to 1950, ranging in price from $25 to $1.5 million. Howlett describes the gallery as the opposite to the "Gucci Lunch." "You know, the Gucci attitude," says Howlett, "as in: if you have to shop during lunch, you're not a Gucci customer. We might like to be intimidating, but we know we wouldn't be any good at it."

AVENUE VICTOR HUGO BOOK SHOP (339 Newbury St.)

When Vince McCaffrey and his wife Thais Coburn opened Avenue Victor Hugo in 1975, their original thought was to call it just Victor Hugo after McCaffrey's favorite writer, but fearing few would recognize the name, they tacked on the "Avenue" to fancy it up a bit. The building had housed a '60s-style head shop before that, and the black spray paint you can still see here and there in the bookstore is a remnant of its predecessor. McCaffrey opened the store with 3,000 titles he'd picked by hand, a list from a college project he'd done on designing a store. "Everything was wrong," says McCaffrey. "Ninety-nine percent of humanity didn't agree with me in terms of what the best books were." In 1975, new books represented the majority of the offerings, and the couple ran a small publishing house for a literary magazine in the back half of the space. By the early '80s, they had shut down the publishing half and switched over to primarily used books, the advent of big bookstore chains having made the new book business too difficult to sustain. The key to his success, says McCaffrey, was to carry a little bit of everything, and go deeper into some things. He's had books that were untouched for five or 10 years, until someone came in and bought them all out. A book browser's fantasy, Avenue Victor Hugo today offers tomes, collector's items and memorabilia ranging from Scottish history to back issues of Scientific American from the 19th century.

JOHN LEWIS (97 Newbury St.)

John Lewis has been designing jewelry on Newbury Street since 1958. He and wife Louise opened the first shop in 1964 at 337 Newbury before relocating to 97 in 1973. "Buildings [around 337] were going for about $100,000," says Lewis, "down here, they were only about $130,000—virtually free by today's standards. In those days, if you were doing a reasonably profitable business, you could afford to buy your own building." Every single piece of jewelry on the premises is designed by Lewis and crafted upstairs in the workshop by a staff of five. The unique pieces are made with exotic gems from exotic places like Mozambique and Madagascar. Lewis says he just fell into making jewelry one day and that was that. "For every 100 designs you come up with in your head," he says, "you're damn lucky of you can get three to work" depending on the degree of difficulty and the time involved. Louise takes care of the business part. Success, Lewis says, comes from "all the American virtues: Pay attention to the business at large, keep costs down, work hard and have something to say." Until recently, Fuzz, the Lewis' big black cat, was a regular sight out front. She had a penchant for attacking small dogs, especially poodles, at sidewalk cafes. Frequently Louise would go and round her up, walking around to the back of the building, so people wouldn't know for sure she came from the Lewis' store.

WINSTON FLOWERS (131 Newbury St.)

Winston Flowers has blossomed in 54 years from the flagship store on Newbury to five stores total, with about 125 employees. Maynard Winston started selling flowers as a child with his father, in a store across from the Ritz. When the building was torn down in 1944 to make way for the Ritz's garage, the pair moved up the street to 131, where Maynard—who died in 1988—worked for 43 years, building corporate business, branching out to grocery stores here and there and, most significantly, establishing an exclusive deal with flower exporters in Holland to supply Winston's with the freshest flowers. These days, Maynard's four sons, David, Ted, Alex and Michael, run the company. Their flowers decorate the finest homes and institutions all over town: the Ritz, the Boston Symphony, Four Seasons, the Museum of Fine Arts and in many of the boutiques along Newbury. Leo Travis remembers fondly his longtime friendship with Maynard, the man who taught him how to play gin rummy on sleepy summer afternoons on Newbury. Winston had a great sense of humor, says Travis, and an appreciation for beauty both floral and feminine: "Whenever a young, pretty lady would come in to the store, Maynard would always pin a flower on them."

JOHNSON'S PAINT CO. (355-353 Newbury St.)

In 1938, John Johnson bought 355 Newbury and opened Johnson's Paint in what was then a stable that had housed horses and carriages from the Beacon Hill crowd. He made $2.75 his first day of business. "At the time that part of Newbury was referred to as 'horse-shit row,'" says John's son Robert, who today with his brother David, runs this, the largest privately owned single paint store on the East Coast, with 21 employees, Robert's mother Catherine who does the payroll and his 27-year-old son Josh. Success, says Robert, comes from the family's commitment to service and stocking everything you could possibly use in painting your home, including specialty hard-to-find items that people from all over the country call for and few know how to use anymore. Johnson's coda: "Don't spend more than you earn, live simply, treat people honestly." The store's clients range from local college students painting their bedrooms to high-tech contractors. One client in the '80s bought 300 gallons of paint for an oil pipeline in Iran. One month later he requested the same exact order because a missile had blown up the storage shed in which the first shipment had been housed. "This is the only job I've ever had, and I still like it," says Johnson, who, when Tower Records first opened, was offered $40 a square foot in rent for the family's 25,000 square foot space—yes, that is a million dollars in rent per year. Johnson shrugs and says congenially, "I like to work."

BROOKS BROTHERS (46 Newbury St.)

A venerable mecca for the fashionably schlumpy Bostonian, Boston's Brooks Brothers is traditionally known for dressing "the Harvard Man" and still thrives on the dime of today's well-to-do aging preppy contingency. Diagonal to the Ritz-Carlton, you might say Brooks Brothers—established on the corner of Newbury and Berkeley in 1928—has made a solid contribution toward upholding the daintily raised nose of the first block of Newbury. As a clothing conglomerate, the store was first established by grocer Henry Sands Brooks in 1818 in what is now the South Street Seaport area of New York City. His goal was to "make and deal only in merchandise of the finest quality, to sell it a fair profit and to deal with people who seek and appreciate such merchandise." Upon Brooks' death in 1833, the business was inherited by his five sons and thus became Brooks Brothers. Over the years, the clothier introduced several American classics: the Seersucker, Sack Suit, button-down polo shirt and argyle socks. The names of those who've donned Brooks Brothers clothing over the years is a who's who in American history, from Abraham Lincoln (who was assassinated wearing a Brooks Brothers suit) and Teddy Roosevelt to Vanderbilts and Rockefellers, to Clark Gable, Jack Kerouac and, today, Fran Liebowitz. ✦

GOOD OSCAR HUNTING

The Commonwealth's 'First Fan,' Governor Paul Cellucci, Picks The Winners

ILLUSTRATION BY ISMAEL ROLDAN

MASSACHUSETTS HAS ALREADY LEFT ITS MARK ON THIS YEAR'S ACADEMY Awards, with two made-partially-in Boston pictures, Good Will Hunting and Amistad, earning a batch of nominations, and those Cambridge lads, Matt and Ben, sure to cop at least one golden statuette. Back home, fans will be rooting for Good Will to take it all, against titanic odds. And foursquare in the homeboys' corner will be the state's "First Fan," they-don't-call-him-'acting'-governor-for-nothing Paul Cellucci. A knowledgeable moviegoer, Cellucci says he often takes in a flick on Friday nights, at a theater in Berlin, near his home. He also forays into Cambridge now and then to catch an indie, he said, like When We Were Kings, about one of his "heroes," Muhammad Ali.

Cellucci's favorite movies of all time, he said, are Sophie's Choice, Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid and The Godfather.

As might be expected, his top two favorites for this year were the quasi-local productions, Good Will Hunting and Amistad. Rounding out Cellucci's Top 10 list were: Eve's Bayou, Face Off, Ulee's Gold, The Full Monty, The Boxer, L.A. Confidential, Titanic and Wings of the Dove, "in that order."

Conspicuous by its absence is As Good As it Gets, which the governor said would have made his "top 15," but, for him, definitely wasn't in the same category as what seems to be its natural rival, Good Will. But he did think Jack Nicholson would win the Oscar for best actor (although he thought Matt Damon deserved to win).

Cellucci said he visited the Good Will set when they were filming in Boston, and chatted with Affleck, whom he'd liked in Chasing Amy, and who "couldn't have been nicer." He said he'll phone Damon and Affleck with congratulations Oscar night, if they win, and "invite them to the State House." Meanwhile, here are his picks for who he thinks should win, and who he thinks will win, come March 23.

BEST PICTURE

As Good as It Gets, The Full Monty, Good Will Hunting (Should Win), L.A. Confidential, Titanic. (Will Win). "I may be a bit partial to Good Will Hunting because it was made here, but Titanic was a fabulous film. It will redefine the meaning of the word blockbuster."

ACTOR

Matt Damon, Good Will Hunting (Should Win); Robert Duvall, The Apostle; Peter Fonda, Ulee's Gold; Dustin Hoffman, Wag the Dog; Jack Nicholson, As Good as It Gets (Will Win). "Matt Damon was terrific. Of course, he wrote the part for himself, so I guess he could play it. And I like Jack Nicholson; he was very good in As Good As It Gets, even though it didn't make my top 10."

ACTRESS

Helena Bonham Carter, The Wings of the Dove; Julie Christie, Afterglow; Judi Dench, Mrs. Brown; Helen Hunt, As Good as It Gets; Kate Winslet, Titanic (Should and Will Win). "...although I loved Wings of the Dove and Helena Bonham Carter. I have to admit I haven't seen Afterglow or Mrs. Brown, so maybe after I do I might change my mind, but I don't think so."

SUPPORTING ACTOR

Robert Forster, Jackie Brown; Anthony Hopkins, Amistad; Greg Kinnear, As Good As It Gets; Burt Reynolds, Boogie Nights; Robin Williams, Good Will Hunting (Should and Will Win)."Anthony Hopkins is really the only competition, although I hear Burt Reynolds was pretty good in Boogie Nights but I didn't see it. There's another Boston boy in that one, Marky Mark. I guess they got to see a lot of him...."

SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Kim Basinger, L.A. Confidential; Joan Cusack, In & Out; Minnie Driver, Good Will Hunting (Should Win); Julianne Moore, Boogie Nights; Gloria Stuart, Titanic (Will Win). "This is going to be the first time that two people playing the same character win. It's the first time two people playing the same character have been nominated."

DIRECTOR

Peter Cattaneo, The Full Monty; Gus Van Sant, Good Will Hunting; Curtis Hanson, L.A. Confidential; Atom Egoyan, The Sweet Hereafter; James Cameron, Titanic (Should and Will Win). "It's hard to argue with a billion-dollar box office."

SCREENPLAY (WRITTEN DIRECTLY FOR THE SCREEN)

Mark Andrus and James L. Brooks, As Good as It Gets; Paul Thomas Anderson, Boogie Nights; Woody Allen, Deconstructing Harry; Simon Beaufoy, The Full Monty; Ben Affleck & Matt Damon, Good Will Hunting (Should and Will Win). "And then I'll call them up and invite them to the State House." ✦

siobhan CAREW wants to please your palate and feed

pomodoro, bok choy and matt murphy's raised the culinary stakes

STRIDING INTO POMODORO, HER GROUNDBREAKING ITALIAN RESTAURANT IN THE NORTH END, SIOBHAN CAREW IS THE WOMAN OF THE HOUR. A chorus of greetings go up to Carew from the regulars packing the tiny, 24-seat restaurant on this wintry Sunday night. The 33-year-old Irish native beams and doesn't miss a beat, kissing her host/waiter/lieutenant on the cheek, darting around tables and offering up her particularly gracious style of hospitality. Less than 20 minutes after arriving, Carew takes the chill away for a young couple waiting on two chairs outside by delivering a piping hot basket of fried calamari and a bowl of freshly made garlicky plum tomato sauce—manna for a mid-winter night.

Carew's not one for staying put or avoiding risk. At 14, she fed her wanderlust by saying she was 17 and landed a job as a nanny for an orthodox Jewish couple in London. Fourteen years later, in 1992, when North End restaurants were marked by a predictable dependence on red sauce, she launched her vision for a new-wave Italian-style trattoria with an emphasis on fresh ingredients and innovative cooking.

Skeptics doubted the viability of such an unconventional approach. But Carew, used to the farm-fresh flavors of her youth and awakened to the possibility of next-wave Italian cooking by forays at the former Michela's in Cambridge's Kendall Square, had the courage to pursue her convictions. After waitressing at the Daily Catch on Hanover Street, she grabbed her chance when a small space became available next door. "As we opened the doors, we were writing out the menu," recalls Carew. "We were so naïve." Nonetheless, Pomodoro— Italian for tomato—quickly became one of the North End's busiest and most popular restaurants, and it remains so today.

Carew found in the restaurant business a potent vehicle for personal change and growth, as well as an axis for mixing food, friendship and conviviality with a humanistic twist. "I think food can be very bonding," she says. "At Pomodoro, I've seen people come in, and they're tired, they're cranky, they're hungry. You give them a glass of wine, some good food, and by the time they leave, they're different people. I guess food really feeds your soul."

Carew and her husband, fellow 33-year-old Irish native Matt Murphy, have evolved from rookie restaurateurs to a significant force in Boston's flourishing restaurant scene. In January 1996, the couple debuted Matt Murphy's Pub in Brookline Village, the pacesetter in a string of more casually sophisticated Irish pub-restaurants that have sprouted in recent years. Once again showing their flair for cross-ethnic eclecticism, Carew and Murphy last fall opened Bok Choy, their second business in Brookline Village, which presents Carew's take on natural Chinese cooking.

Like Pomodoro, which breathed fresh life into a tired approach to Italian food, Bok Choy and Matt Murphy's raise the respective stakes on debased versions of Chinese and Irish cooking. The sugary, fat-laden stuff typical of most Chinese cooking in America sets teeth gnashing for Carew, who recalls a more natural style from her years in London. Instead of spare ribs and sweet and sour pork, diners at Bok Choy will find such reinvented fare as egg drop soup with shiitake mushroom broth, and Szechuan-style half-duck, slow-roasted and brushed with sticky glaze. And while some pubs rely on such inauthentic Hibernian fare as steak tips and teriyaki chicken wings, Matt Murphy's offers up a perfectly cooked half roast chicken with scallion mashed potatoes and pan gravy, and crispy cod and chips, wrapped in newspaper, and served with malt vinegar and pickled onions.

An energetic woman who seems quick to laugh, Carew runs family-friendly restaurants in an increasingly sterile marketplace of generic Starbucks and Au Bon Pains. It's no coincidence that all her places are located in the North End or Brookline Village, neighborhoods that can be easily navigated by foot. And while her restaurants may represent the culinary New Guard, Carew's faith in old-world values is evinced by her adamant refusal to use credit cards and computers in any of her businesses. If America has proven to be the land of opportunity for Carew, who works seven days and is raising three daughters happily and without complaint, the nation's frenzied lifestyle, technological buzz and insufficient reverence for families seem seen as constant threats.

When her girls argue that Tamagotchis, the computer-simulated electronic pets, are a way for them to learn about responsibility, Carew pinpoints the devices as ingredients for what she says is one more step on the desensitization to real life. "I see a major breakdown, and I think it's important to preserve a sense of what's important," she says while talking recently over tea at Bok Choy. It doesn't come as a surprise to learn that the girls, 10-year-old Michela, 8-year-old Ciara and 6-year-old Niamh, are sent to the ancestral homeland in Ireland each summer for a dose of tradition. Ever the proud mother, Carew considers the girls her finest accomplishment.

Inspired by the classics and adventure books she fed on as a little girl, Carew was 14, just four years older than Michela, when she bolted out of her small farming village in County Tipperary to go to England. "There was a whole world I wanted to explore, and the sooner I could get at it, the better," she says. But when Michela wants to head out with a female friend, not across the sea but merely for a bagel in Brookline Village, Carew upbraids the girl for her audacity. "Giving little girls a lot of independence is not a good thing, because then when they're older they might get big ideas," she tells Michela with a Gaelic mix of maternal affection and severity.

In between shuttling the girls off to friends' houses or swimming and tennis sessions, Carew spends her days at Bok Choy and her nights at Pomodoro, which boasts an open kitchen, a lineage of noted chefs (including Paul O'Connell of Providence; Barbara Lynch, formerly of Galleria Italiana; Paul and Manny Sifnugel of the Claremont Café and Nick Tischler of Restaurant Zinc), endearing quirks (diners in need of a restroom are sent to nearby cafes) and such gutsy Mediterranean-style fare as the signature fried calamari, steamed mussels in a saffron-scented fennel stew, and peppered sirloin served over butternut risotto, winter ratatouille and a roasted shallot balsamic drizzle. But the star is Carew, who delivers a robust and solicitous presence as the restaurant's hostess, waitress, wine steward and guiding spirit.

"Her personality is larger than life," says Stan Frankenthaler, who cooked at Pomodoro while preparing to launch Salamander in Cambridge. "Time and time again, what I've seen her do is really bend over backward to provide her guest—she really looks at it that way—with just what they want. Whatever it takes, she'll do it," such as bringing her entire restaurant crew to the Berkshires to cater a wedding for a regular, or transforming overnight a Brookline warehouse that lacked electricity and water into an Asian banquet hall, complete with Japanese laterns and puppets scored during a jaunt to New York.

After her adolescent stint as a nanny, Carew traveled solo through much of Europe, and got hooked on the Hub when a 1981 visit coincided with a stretch of irresistible summer weather. Two years later, Carew met her future husband at the Emerald Isle Pub in the Fields Corner section of Dorchester.

Asked to describe his first impression of Siobhan (pronounced Shh-Von), the affable Matt Murphy says, "Dynamic, I guess. She definitely had a lot of energy. She's definitely the motivator in the relationship. I'm more laid back. We tend to be a contrast a little bit. I'm cautious, while she's the risk-taker. Most of the time, we complement each other."

Settling with her husband in Brookline, Carew planned to teach after graduating from Wheelock College with a degree in elementary education and child psychology. But she took up waitressing since it would allow her to spend days at home with their young daughters. A food lover from her early years, Carew's palate expanded as she moved from Five Seasons, a natural foods restaurant in Jamaica Plain, to Michela's and the Daily Catch.

In 1992, seizing the moment when a storefront opened on Hanover Street, Carew launched Pomodoro with a $38,000 loan from Geraldo Riccio, owner of Caffe Vittoria and the Florentine Café, in exchange for a pledge of repayment in five years with interest and a share of the profits. Business boomed and critics raved. But the relationship between Riccio and Carew subsequently soured, and he sued her in Suffolk Superior Court. The dispute was later settled out of court for an undisclosed sum. Carew rolled into 1996 with the opening of Matt Murphy's, but hit a dark mysterious blip when a small pipe bomb exploded in Pomodoro in February, causing minor damage.

Carew got back on track with impressive speed and agility. With the help of friends, regulars and North Enders the damage was repaired within a day and hungry customers were again lining up for dinner.

From an initial leap of faith, Pomodoro blazed the trail in the North End for such other innovative Italian restaurants as Alloro, Antico Forno and Marcuccio's. After Carew and Murphy proved themselves capable of running an Italian restaurant, something closer to their roots seemed like a natural.

"The idea of a neighborhood pub appealed to us," says Murphy, a former mason who handles the cooking duties at his eponymous pub and restaurant. "In Ireland, it's more than just a bar. It's like a neighborhood gathering place. It's families, children, weddings, funerals. It's a social gathering place." The welcoming sense of Matt Murphy's, rated best Irish pub and top family-friendly restaurant in the 1998 Zagat Boston survey, is evident as different parties share worn wooden tables and often begin intramural bantering over a few pints and Murphy's handiwork from the kitchen. "I hope you don't mind us brown-bagging," proclaims a handsome dad in his early 30s, out for dinner with a buddy and readying a hot water bottle for his infant son. "As long as you're not going to breast feed him," a waiter quips in kind. ✦

Vive Les Steak Frites!

And while we're at it, long live Coq au Vin, Onion Tart, and the rustic home-style cooking of the Alsace region of France. Alsace is the spiritual home of Brasserie Jo. Our actual home is in the Back Bay, where we also brew our own beer, and create memorable desserts in the classic French tradition.

GET LOADED AFTER WORK

the ultimate after-work entertainment

Bachelor/Bachelorette Parties

Corporate Outings

Birthday Parties

and much more

The rules are simple. Capture the other team's flag before they capture yours. But there's a catch. They have guns. They're firing paintballs straight at you. And if you're hit, you're out of the game. It's the ultimate in after office entertainment. We provide the equipment. We offer special group discounts. And we're just one block from The FleetCenter. Call today to arrange your special event. And see your boss in a whole new way.

Curious Liquids is a paragon of coffeehouses.
- Boston Phoenix

Care for a cup of coffee in an ancient wine cellar? Curious Liquids is the perfect spot.
- The Suffolk Journal

Here is a tea room / coffee house for the nineties. What a great spot to relax.
- Sidewalk.com

Good people of the world, WHERE magazine needs to enlist you in a very noble cause. We're asking you to put down that coffee you bought from that corporate-chain coffee house and immerse yourself in some liquid wonder...
- Where magazine

Drinkable and soft, cafe has it. The decor is equally interesting – vintage furniture upstairs, red and platinum rooms downstairs...

Andalusian Passion

Boston may not be a city known for fiery emotion and hot-blooded passion, but for one night Symphony Hall will be transformed into the biggest cante gitano bar this side of Spain. On March 22, World Music brings the Paco de Lucia sextet to Boston for an evening of rhythmically complex, melodically and harmonically expressive flamenco music. Visually and musically exciting, flamenco's complex art form fuses powerful rhythms and dramatic singing with roots in the Gypsy, Muslim and Jewish cultures that at one time settled in the South of Spain. The Paco de Lucia sextet, thrilling audiences for more than 30 years, performs at Symphony Hall at 7 pm. Tickets are $28-37, call 931-2000.

Muppets on Heroin

Can you say "Ventriloquist of the Year" in three different voices without moving your lips? Jeff Dunham (you know—the guy from the Hertz commercials) can and I suppose that's why he was awarded the aforementioned accolade not just once but twice. Dunham appears—with his puppets Peanut, a purple and green woozie, Walter, a mean spirited grouch, and Jose Jalepeno, a pepper on a stick—at the Comedy Connection March 19, 20 and 22 and performs a rapid fire six-way conversation with three distinctive voices. Tickets are $11-20, call 248-9700.

An Alan Smithee Film: Burn, Hollywood, Burn ★

The creator of this tedious poison pen letter to Hollywood, screenwriter Joe Eszterhas (Flashdance, Showgirls) has profited wildly, and baffingly, from the industry. The plot hinges on the fact that if a director declines credit for a film, it goes to the fictitious Alan Smithee. What if a man named Alan Smithee wants his name off a film? AASF, a mockumentary, examines the hubbub caused when the negative of a $200 million action movie is stolen by eccentric director Smithee (Eric Idle), because the autocratic producers recut it. Hollywood types are lampooned and cameos pepper the film. As satire, AASF has its finger firmly on the pulse—of the 80s. The egotistical producers (Ryan O'Neil and Richard Jeni) seem based on Don Simpson and Jerry Bruckheimer; references to Mike Ovitz, an Eszterhas foe, abound. The feel is akin to someone laughing too loud at his own jokes. Comedy hack Arthur Hiller directed the movie but had his name taken off it. Only Jackie Chan comes out ahead—he co-stars in the action movie with Sylvester Stallone and Whoopi Goldberg, and is thus presented as their box office peer.

The Big Lebowski ★★

The Coen Brothers's latest is analogous to Mars Attacks!: you know its maker(s) can make deeper and better movies, but damn, this one is funny. The movie is a stream of consciousness centering on a relic of '60s counterculture called The Dude. Our hero is played brilliantly, down to the drug-numbed nerve fiber, by Jeff Bridges. Surnamed Lebowski, The Dude gets mistaken for a millionaire named Lebowski (David Huddleston), and the twisted plot begins. Yeah, it leaves a sour taste that the Coens use kidnapping and ransom so soon after Fargo. And that the retro bowling subculture in which The Dude spends his considerable leisure time has been done inKingpin. But there's so much dazzling schtick in The Big Lebowski that it seems pointless to quibble about continuity and originality. John Goodman gets his best movie role in the past umpteen as The Dude's buddy Walter, rational-sounding but psycho. John Turturro is out-there as the peacock-like Latino bowling god Jesus. Julianne Moore amazes an action painter who speaks in patrician lockjaw. Lots more great supporting players, and trippy dream sequences.

Bowling for dollars: Bridges in The Big Lebowski

The Gingerbread Man ★

Don't let director Robert Altman's name lure you into this paint-by-numbers John Grisham borefest. It's spooky how insulting to the intelligence this movie is. The story concerns a hotshot (could he be anything less?) Savannah lawyer who steps into a world of trouble when he helps a woman in distress. Kenneth Branagh doesn't exactly embarrass himself in the lead role—except for his choice to take part in a production based on such a ridiculous script. He immerses himself into a character we care nothing about. The launching point is supposed to be his attraction to Embeth Davidtz—whose hillbilly father played by Robert Duvall is causing trouble for her—but there's no chemistry at all between the actors. None of the supporting players hooks us in either (Robert Downey Jr. as a sleazy detective, Famke Janssen as Branagh's alcoholic ex, Daryl Hannah as a lawyer). Run, run, as far as you, can away from this movie.

Men With Guns ★★

John Sayles follows up Lone Star with a Spanish-language film that mourns the cycle of politically motivated violence in Latin America—and shows us the people who are caught in the crossfire between military regimes and rebel factions. Federico Luppi (Cronos) plays a doctor with a cushy practice who has trained idealistic young medicos for a relief agency. A chance encounter makes him realize that his former students, now practicing in Indian villages in the mountains, are in danger. His search for the young doctors becomes our learning experience, as he hears stories from a precocious orphan boy who becomes his guide, a soldier who has deserted, and a guilt-stricken priest. Fresh as the subject is for American cinema, Sayles's movie is sadly stiff. It's as if, in telling a daring story, he felt he had to dumb-down the storytelling devices he uses. As the cliches mount, the film becomes black-and-white in outlook (saved somewhat by the deserter character), and thus easy to dismiss.

Mrs. Dalloway ★★★

Marleen Gorris's (Antonia's Line) film version of Virginia Woolf's novel is a movie of gentle power. On a lovely spring day in London in 1923, Mrs. Clarissa Dalloway (Vanessa Redgrave), wife of a Member of Parliament, thinks about the summer of 1890, when she made a decision that would determine her path in life. Natascha McElhone plays the radiant young Clarissa, who is courted by friends of both sexes on her family's lush country estate. The 1920s story contains a subplot that adds a tragic dimension to the piece, about a World War I veteran (Rupert Graves) suffering from delayed shell-shock. Redgrave conveys the doubts that lie within the society lady's dignified exterior. Gorris finds visceral ways to complement Woolf's words; the screenplay was written by actress Eileen Atkins, who has made it her mission to bring Woolf to the public on stage and screen.

Nil By Mouth ★★1/2

She gets knocked down, but she gets up again. Kathy Burke rightfully won Best Actress at the Cannes Film Festival for her naturalistic performance in this gritty hunk of South London working-class life written and directed by Gary Oldman. Burke's Val is on the sidelines for much of the movie, making cups of tea with a ground-down look in her puffy eyes. The movie starts with Mean Streets male bravado. Val's husband (Ray Winstone) is a cokehead lout with no brains and overeager fists. Her brother (Charlie Creed-Miles) is a junkie who wheedles money out of their mother (Laila Morse). The film is more about behavior than plot, using grainy visuals and voyeuristic hand-held camera. It's often jarringly effective as it shows the gulf between men and women (even as it imitates films by Ken Loach). But it would have been more powerful if it weren't so longwinded (at more than two hours). The thick Cockney accents and heavy use of British slang could be a big barrier; it's as if, after almost a decade of playing various Americans and Dracula and Beethoven, Oldman got orgasmic joy out of using, undiluted, the idiom in which he grew up.

Tastings

BY GRETCHEN VOSS

Smokin'

The Oak Bar at the Fairmont Copley Plaza offers Smokin' Oak Socials every Tuesday night through March. The informal evenings include tastings of single malt scotches, cognacs and ports, paired with cigars from L.J. Peretti. The tastings run from 6-8 pm and cost $35 per person. March 17 features Hennessy Cognacs with Cifuente Fancy Tail. March 24 features Small Batch Bourbons with Avo XO Intermezzo Cigars. Call 267-5300 for reservations.

Wine Dinner

The Vault Bistro & Wine Bar features an all-Pinot Noir dinner on March 18, 6:30 pm. Chef Rebecca Esty creates a unique menu designed to highlight the subtle elegance of Pinot Noir from California, Oregon, South Africa and Burgundy's Cote d'or. The dinner starts at 6:30 pm and seating is limited to 25 guests, so make reservations now at 292-9966.

Recipe Festival

Boston Park Plaza Hotel has whipped up a dozen zesty weekends featuring international cooking demonstrations by famous Boston chefs for The Great Recipe Festival. Chefs and celebrities will share secrets and stories and feed patrons their specialties through March 29. The near future will entertain Ian Just and Lorenzo Savona from Les Zygomates on March 14 and Markus Ripperger of the Hampshire House and 75 Chestnut on March 21.

Sushi & Champagne

Every Friday night through March, chef Jam Navaraj rolls his own sushi and pairs it with various French champagnes at The Exchange Restaurant and Cafe on State Street. For a mere $25, guests will be joined by the chef as he acquaints them with the various subtleties of the champagne and how they are matched with the sushi. Call 726-7600 for more information.

Mardi Gras

Magnolia's in Cambridge celebrates the delicacies of the bayou through March 28 with its Mardi Gras Festival. Showcasing fresh seafood and shellfish flown in from the Gulf Coast, the Mardi Gras Festival's selections include crawfish, shrimp remoulade and pan-fried catfish. Call 576-19712 for reservations.

Snacks

Tanjore in Cambridge is the first restaurant in Boston to serve "nashtas," which means snacks. Served between meals or late-nite in India, the personal-sized portions can also be made into a meal just as you would at a Chinese dim sum. Some of the nashtas treats include Ragda Pettis (potato patties on a bed of white peas topped with tamarind), Dahi Bhalla (lentil dumplings with yogurt) and Reshmi Kabobs (a "pate" of chicken and herbs wrapped around a skewer and charcoal-grilled). Prices range from $4-8.

Champagne and Caviar

Kicking off 1998 with style, Plaza III • The Kansas City Steakhouse in the heart of Faneuil Hall introduces a Champagne, Oyster & American Caviar Bar. A selection of moderately-priced American "methode champenoise" sparkling wines and "grand marque" French champagnes by-the-glass will be served, accompanied by an appealing array of appetizers from across North America, including freshly shucked oysters on the half-shell, sturgeon caviar, golden caviar, oysters Rockefeller and Nova Scotia smoked salmon.

Tea and Tunes

Afternoon tea at the Bristol Lounge of the Four Seasons Hotel will get a little livelier this winter with the addition of the Harvard Krokodiles. Slug back tea (blow first) to the tunes of Harvard University's oldest a cappella singing group the first Saturday of every month from January through May and September through December from 3:30-4 pm.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Euro

Forget Seth Greenberg's haunts for the hottest Euro scene—hit Turner Fisheries at the Westin Copley Place Boston instead with its EuroCuisine '98. Chef David Filippetti takes you on a culinary excursion spiced with European Michelin guest chef visits, cookbook signings and wine tastings. Menu specials will be paired with wines from Laboure-Roi and Chateau Lynch. Don't miss the Pan Seared Scallops Pancetta, and don't forget to stick your pinkie out ever so delicately while sipping your wine.

Chocoholics

Add to your waistline for a great cause. All winter Grill 23 on Berkeley Street serves a Chocolate Sampler Plate, consisting of several unique chocolate desserts created by pastry chef Judy Mattera, to benefit Share Our Strength. Two chocoholics can feast fabulously on the $20 house-made truffles, mousse, custard, cookies and cakes, with $5 to charity.

Improper IMPERSONALS

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. That's why we have the Improper Impersonals, a column written by you, the reader. Send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And it's free! Pick up a pen and tell that babe on the T you like his butt by writing to Improper Impersonals, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, 75 Arlington Street, 9th Floor Boston, MA 02116, fax: (617) 859-1446 or e-mail us at editor@improper.com. Recent correspondence follows.

To the Berklee Drummer Gal
We met at the Hynes T stop on January 15 at about noon when you struck up a conversation with me. We rode in together as far as Park Street and, when I got off, I realized that you had charmed me! Stupidly, I had neither your name nor number—just a little shy that day I guess. I tried to reach you via Berklee's "student notice" board, without success. Skywriting is not an option, so I hope you (or a friend) will see this. If you're interested in re-connecting, call me at 262-4510—if you're not, call anyway as I can handle a reality check!
HAROLD

Dear Susan
I am sorry. Failed relationships and alcohol are my life.
NED

Talk Radio
I saw you riding the commuter rail a long time ago. We had this great conversation (I was feeling very down that day). Are you hiding from me? Anyway, I'd like to take you to dinner. Who knows what could come out of it—a marriage, a great house in Halifax, two beautiful children...a lifetime. I truly believe that someone was watching out for me that day. I love you. You're the best thing that ever happened to me.
COMING OUT OF THE DARK

Patricia
I wish some woman with a sense of sisterhood had told me what I'm telling you now: he can't be trusted. He lied to me over and over while swearing he would always be honest with me. He lied to the woman before me, too. He's probably lying to you about something, and if he isn't yet, I'm sure it's just a matter of time. There's a reason I told him we couldn't be friends any longer. If you don't believe me, go ahead and get in touch with me—I'm not hard to find. PLEASE think twice about putting that ring on your finger! It's one thing to date a liar. It's another thing entirely to marry one.
ONCE BURNT

You on the Nordic Track
I think you said your name was Lucy. What are you doing for the rest of my life? I don't like to talk, but I'd go down your street any time. I love your smile and those fingernail marks. Don't ever stop teasing me. I'll love you forever.
HUEY

Every time the phone now rings,
My heart races,
Hope takes wing.
Tell me in your heart
To take my place.
One of the hardest things
I'll ever have to do
Is not to call,
Not to see you
When I'm near a phone, or Driving my car.
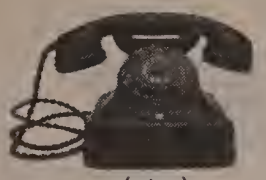
PUMKIN

M
I met you at a "BIG" Alley bar. Our eyes locked and we danced all night. You called the next day, only to have been disconnected. You never called back, and I do not know how to find you. Please call again, Umass senior, I wonder about you.
L



To J the Musician
If only you hadn't disappeared from shame, I'd have given you what you deserve...and tell you I always thought your music stunk and a load of other things that I know you wouldn't have been able to deal with hearing from me. Hope I don't see your sorry self around anymore and I know you've kept your friends (my neighbors) well informed with every detail all the way and, I wonder, also about how it ended.

Free Matt
Citizens of Boston, we have within our midst a travesty of justice so severe, so diabolically evil that I shudder even thinking about exposing you to such mechanisms of human destruction. The inviting facade of Back Bay hides well the brutalities that go on behind the closed doors of a local media company where a peon known only as MATT subjugates himself daily before a tyrannical boss and her lap dog spy. Their concerted efforts at dehumanizing and molding MATT into their plaything have as yet been unsuccessful. Join us in preventing yet another waste of talent.
BROUGHT TO YOU BY THE COMMITTEE TO FREE MATT

Emerson College Student
On Monday, February 2, at the North Quincy T station you were waiting for a bus to Marina Bay around 11:30 am (your appointment was at 12 pm). You said you were from Turkey, have been here three years and are majoring in television communications. I asked the bus driver which bus you needed to take (Rt. 211). You were reading Pluto. I never got your name! Help!
CRUSHED IN QUINCY

ALF
I aimlessly stroll the darkened avenues of this cold and stagnant city while we're apart. My eyes sullen and somber as my heart saturated with love for you is dying without the warmth of your hands to clutch it tight. I long for the night when we lie together as one. Our fiery naked flesh pressed together grinding in feverish passion. 'Til then I go through the daily motions of life and lay awake alone at night in our chamber recalling what every part of your body tastes like as I slide my tongue over it. I only pray that my heart will continue to beat until you reappear. I love and miss you more than you could possibly fathom. Eternally yours.

The Big Easy Bar

1 Boylston Place, Boston, 351-7000. Informal. Located in Boston's version of Bourbon Street, "The Alley." The Big Easy Bar is a hot new New Orleans style bar featuring Boston's best live bands and disc jockeys nightly playing music you know and love. Relax in a lounge, listen to the band, play billiards, hang at the bar or dance the night away. The Big Easy Bar has something fun for everyone. Great beer selection, 22 oz. Hurricanes, 4 huge bars, 2 lounges, a balcony, plenty of seating, and a large dance floor. Wed. - Sat. 8 pm - 2 am. Major credit cards accepted. Valet parking available.

The Druid

1357 Cambridge St., Inman Square, Cambridge, 497-0965. In the cozy, old world atmosphere of The Druid you will find antique furnishings complemented by original Celtic artwork. To help digest the hearty food and great beer selection, the varied music can take you from rock/alternative/blues to traditional Irish sessions performed live Sundays, 5:30 pm - 8:30 pm. All musicians welcome. Sunday brunch is a must.

The Rack

20 Clinton St., Boston, 725-1051. The Rack, winner of The Improper Bostonian's 1997 Boston's Best award, offers much more than a game of pool. This restaurant/night club/pool hall is quickly becoming the hottest spot in Boston. We welcome you to enjoy a delicious meal, a martini, a fine cigar and live entertainment seven nights a week. The Rack provides a host of Blues and R&B bands from 6:30 pm - 2 am.

IRISH

The Kells

161 Brighton Ave., Allston, 782-9082. "Cadillac of Irish bars," Boston Phoenix. It is one of the hottest night spots and dance clubs around featuring "the best live bands." Musically, it's Allston in microcosm... everything from the cutting edge of rock to original Irish folk music. Live entertainment 6 nights a week. For those important International and American sporting events, check out the 12-foot screen TV at The Kells. Students are welcome. Open 7 nights until 2 am.

SPORTS

Boston Paintball

131 Beverly St., Boston, 742-6612. The rules are simple. There are teams and everyone has paintball guns. You are inside of a large warehouse (near the Boston Garden). They are firing balls straight at you. You scream, dodge, hide, wipe-out and have a blast!!! Great for bachelor/bachelorette parties, corporate outings, birthday parties, and much more.

If you really want it. . .it's CLASSIFIED

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

MARCH 11 - MARCH 24, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

You're a busy creature, reaching out to attractive folks, who, incidentally, can lift your career objectives a notch higher and add luster to your reputation. Power is easily come by Saturday night, but it's also easily abused. While you are so much in demand, do us a favor and don't demand too much. But if you don't give a damn, go ahead and play that bad boy/bitchy girl game. On a higher plane, much good can be gained by probing into the secret wisdom of the ages, and, on another level, by checking out your partner's secret stash.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Make the most of your current position, your association with a person you consider rich and powerful, and your curiosity about something, someplace or somebody that has caught your eye. Really it will be quite a while until you're in as good a spot to score points for your side as you are this week. Well, maybe on the 28th, but by then Mercury will be retrograde and you won't be as brilliant or receptive. St. Patrick's Day could be one for the books (your diary, not the sheriff's) if you dare to break the mold.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Power to the partner. It's the person across the table who is holding the best cards this week. So if you want to stay in the game and share in the winnings, try to play nice, no matter how much you think you're being manipulated. What you could do entirely on your own is listen to your intuition on Saturday afternoon, or if you're with a group, pay close attention to information that's dropped about a subject that's brand-new to you. It'll pay off, Maybe as soon as St. Patrick's day.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

A get-up-and-go feeling can literally put you on the road this weekend, searching for adventure or a high-stakes game to get into. Athletes are odds-on favorites, but any skilled performer with a reputation to maintain should do well. However, when it comes to romance, instead of positioning yourself so you can call the shots, you'd be better off losing some of your prized control and welcoming the offbeat, even the certifiably weird onto your scene. This could turn out to be the challenge you're looking for.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Whatever is new, exciting, even eccentric is all your heart may desire this week. How you integrate your taste for a memorable adventure into your daily routine is your business, but I'm confident that, one way or another, you'll manage. Actually there's very little you can't accomplish by hook or by crook right now; more likely by crook. The weekend will be interesting whether you stay home or go out, but the high point comes on St. Paddy's Day when Venus and extraordinary Uranus meet in your Aquarius house of partners. And who will you meet?

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Odd occurrences, unorthodox playmates and an entertainment alternative that's really alternative. Welcome to the land of Aquarian fun-and-games, a.k.a. Tomorrowland. You may have passed through this amusement park before, but rarely have you encountered such a non-frustrating time there as you will now. Everything about this period seems geared toward helping you adjust to unusual people and pastimes, or to exploring avenues of self-expression you normally wouldn't. So, are you searching for a pair of pointy green shoes or just the leprechauns' pot of gold?

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Will what your partners say now hurt you? Are they perceptive enough to realize what your true feelings are? Will you tell them? Emotions belonging to family members, children, coworkers, a lover and/or your mate (or an attorney) are all that matter. Not that your feeling are excluded from this formidable group, but it's other people and the surprises they are about to lay on you, that you're concerned with. Expect something out of the ordinary, positively astonishing on Tuesday during the wearing of the green.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

A mild shock, or at least the willingness to be electrified by something of a rare beauty and distinction. Definitely worth waiting for, but until this event, this gift arrives on the 17th, you'll have motive and opportunity to put yourself together so you can properly receive it. As your co-rulers, Mars and Pluto, form a rewarding trine this weekend, something that has been skewed about you comes back into alignment. Doing yoga could work wonders, but so would another creative or recreational pastime that makes you glad you're you.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Great determination, monstrous desire as horny Mars makes a rewarding trine to power-crazed Pluto in your sign. Pick your goal carefully because this weekend you will not be denied. The trine creates a macho mood that can intimidate your nearest and dearest. Luckily, you can buy them off with original gifts that are sure to please. Cruising Circuit City is a good way to channel the electrifying energy generated by the meeting of two hot planets, Venus and Uranus, in your money house. Try the Pleasure Chest, too.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Something changes. Maybe it's not the way you look per se, but the way you feel about the way you look. Maybe it's just something sweet or offbeat that you'd like to claim for your own. Whatever way the positive planetary aspects this weekend manifest, they'll be concentrated within your small circle of self-worth. Perhaps some goodie will rub off on a neighbor or one will hit the house, but basically all the benefits are being directed to you. And if you need help only an organization such as the union can give, you can have that too.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Shining and spectacular, electrifying and exciting; your appeal wont's be any stronger than it is right now. But if you can't see that inner light, make sure you're out and about on St. Patrick's Day so that the public can confirm my opinion. That's when the magnetic Venus and outrageous Uranus meet in your sign and give you the highest rating. If all this sounds like so much hype, then perhaps you'll settle for one ballsy, entrepreneurial idea that can transform your scene and speed-dial you into your future.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

As the last days of the old astrological year meander to a close, take comfort in the fact that you'll continue to be blessed by generous Jupiter in your sign until February 1999. Although sparks between friends are going off every which way, and the sexual content of their conversations might make a cold fish blush, you can obtain a real-life career benefit. Simply by being direct and somewhat brutal on Saturday night, you'll get what you need from a powerful person, someone you could call your godfather.

Curious about the future? Order a personalized Transit Forecast (30-40+ pages) detailing the major themes and issues that will arise over the next 12 months. Send name, date, time and place of birth, plus a check or money order for $42.50 per report to ROCKIE GARDINER, 7985 Santa Monica Blvd., No. 541, West Hollywood, CA 90046 or go on line at http://www.rockiehoroscope.com.

WHATEVER BLOWS YOUR SKIRT UP

Proving that erotica is in the eye of the beholder, Paramour magazine hosted a Valentine's Reading at Waterstone's.

There was more laughter than one might have expected; otherwise, the only noise to interrupt the readings was an occasional cough or the squeak of a bondage enthusiast's latex outfit, although, in truth, most of the audience looked more like grad students than fetishists.

Spotted among the crowd: smut queen Amelia Copeland (Paramour's publisher), the dominatrix tag team of Cynthia von Buhler and Bunni Peculiar, Cambridge dirty-writer Annie Regrets, ever-present hipster Stephen Goldstein and talk radio's voice of reason, Christopher Lydon, host of the Connection, with his colleague, Sheela Hulsoor, who were preparing for the following day's show on erotica.

Most of the readings had as much violence as sexual content, and overall, they were unexpectedly literary and cerebral.

"My third poem is about murder," one participant announced, and then proceeded to recite a poem about gardening gloves and mucous, after which it was time to pause for a coffee and dessert break.

Kind of makes you long for a good, old fashioned porno movie, doesn't it?

SORRY, NO CAKE ON DUTY

What's a party without a paddy wagon, an ambulance and a few uninvited guests in uniform?

To celebrate his 34th birthday, glamour gym owner Adam Berke asked The Man of a Thousand Hair-Colors, WBCN's Buster, to throw an afterhours bash at his eponymous Fenway gym.

Various and sundry scenesters showed up, like genial Mistral GM Jeff Gates, drink slinger Cara McLaughlin, Zinc owner Chris Spann, kool kat Eric B., the flaming haired Amy Gottesman, the angel Gabriel (Stubbe, that is), muralist Raphael Jaimes-Branger, doctor of mixology Peter Cipriani and just about every nightcrawling club kid within a 100-mile radius.

Around four, the police arrived, responding to a bogus report of a stabbing, and the wiseass award went to the guest who took one look at them and said, "Oh, good. You're just in time to help Adam blow out the candles."

STRANGELY, THERE WAS NO LINE FOR THE MEN'S ROOM

Sisters of Sappho rejoice!

Woman's woman Tracie Beale, whose lesbian nights at Ryles were such a huge draw, is now hosting The Convent on Sundays at Finnegans's Wake, with such raucous entertainment as a recent Drag King Contest.

Among the performers was a black diva named Dred, wearing a gravity-defying afro wig, sunglasses and a naugahyde jacket, who lip-synched the theme to Shaft, while a polyester-clad traveling salesman lookalike prompted one member of the audience to mutter, "That looks disturbingly like my uncle from Cleveland."

Lest you doubt that women impersonating the cruder sex can be as hilariously raunchy as their gender-bending male counterparts, one of the tamer jokes of the evening involved parsley and pubic hair, but was way too disgusting to print.

POLLY WANT A LAXATIVE?

As always, the I.C.A.'s new exhibit provoked a good deal of high-minded discussion about what, exactly, is art.

Assembled at the opening of Transcience and Sentimentality: From Boston and Beyond were a smattering of aesthetes and art enthusiasts that included uber-groovers Kay Hanley and Michael Eisenstein of Letters to Cleo, the institute's new director Jill Medvedow, Boston-bred soap opera hunk Andrew Giodano (visiting from N.Y.), the theatrically offensive Abe Rybeck of Theater Offensive, hair deity Mario Russo, arts patron Ken Freed, gallery owner Bernie Toale, artist Yasuko Bush and stunning blonde philanthropist Barbara Lee, among others.

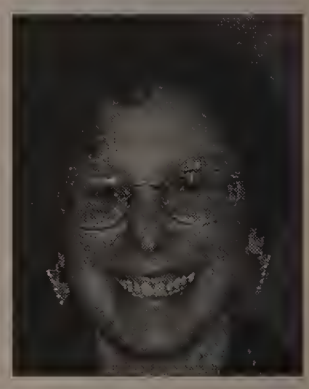
In between air-kissing and nibbling on hors d'ouevres, guests took in the show, which includes a piece by John Kramer made entirely of Post-It notes and one by Cheri Eisenberg made of dirty birdcage trays—complete with feathers and bird-droppings—artfully displayed beneath blocks of text.

"I should just bring my cat's litter-box here, instead of cleaning it," said one attendee. "They could display it under a little haiku about a hairball."

NESSUN DORMA

As expected, the VIP opening of Aria approached maximum fabulosity, with the glamour quotient reaching critical levels and lots of people who were too cool to look like they were actually having a good time.

A joint effort between the crown prince of nightlife, Seth Greenberg, and theater impresario Jon Platt, the sumptuous and sophisticated new club in the basement of the Wilbur Theater looks like a whorehouse designed by Versace.



Spotted giving the banquettes a test drive were such members of the demi-monde as retail roues Riccardo Dalai of Riccardi and Gerardo Defabritiis of Italia 2000, newlywed lawyer Stuart Sojcher and his graphic artist wife Diane Gilbert, modeling's mother hen, Maggie, man of leisure Roger Dashow, divorce lawyer Matthew Kozol, the telegenic Liz Claman and Craig Stevens of Channel 7, Harley-riding hairstylist Steven Doherty, the ever-smiling Michael Lyons, gravel-voiced John Rossbrook, and one guy in a Brooks Brothers suit who looked distinctly ill-at-ease and nearly choked when the bartender charged him $8.50 for a drink.

Welcome to fabulousness. ✦

At the I.C.A.: Right, Jill Medvedow; below, Cheri Eisenberg's birdcage trays.

Hitting The G-Spot

Reading the G. Love story (Music column, March 11) was a completely insightful event. I have listened to Love and his slack-jawed crooning but I always thought Love was all about Philly. Never in a million years did I think this guy was Bostonian enough to play at places like the Rat and the Tam. I just have one question: What the hell is a Dobro? Whatever it is, G. Love should never (ever) be compared to Beck or his "Loser" cronies.

Hoping The Sizzle Doesn't Fizzle

Thank you for the recent profile of musician G. Love. I first saw Mr. Love play a show at Bill's Bar a year or so ago, and he tore the roof off the place with a sizzling, clever show that revealed him as a crafty, innovative musician. Playing alongside him was an old man whose name I never caught; he had a beard of genital-coverage length and a rumor swept through the small crowd that, in his down time, you could catch Beardy tending register at a Store 24 in Cambridge. Multi-talented, multi-faceted musicianship: that's what the G. Love experience is all about.

As for G. himself, I congratulate him on moving up to gigs at the Orpheum, although I fear something will be lost in the transition. The last several shows I've seen there were bands who, last swing through town, played at places like Avalon. The jump to bigger venues has usually meant a vast increase in the number of drooling, insipid teenagers in the audience, and nothing will kill an artist's career faster than appealing to fickle teens.

No Longer Bewildered

Kudos to Peter Terhune's March 11 Beer column on the secret of the "widget." I am partial to both Boddington's and Guinness and that little shaking sound has always left me a bit bewildered. I mean, I know what the tiny bugger does. And I know what it looks like—thanks to an exacto, muscle and a healthy dose of curiosity—but I never really knew why companies would want the thing in the bottom of a can of beer until Terhune decided to pay homage to the widget by explaining, in depth, just what the hell it is.

Cheers.

Survival Of The Fittest

Kristen Bisson's survey of Newbury Street survivors answered the question I'd often asked myself: With the rapid turnover, who has been there for the long haul?

As Bisson mentions, I remember coming to college in Boston from a small town in Ohio and discovering the sophistication of my dreams on the street, except for the blocks at the uptown side near Mass Ave.

I imagined that Newbury Street was like Paris, or Rome or Vienna. Since then, I have watched a lot of things change in Boston, but Newbury Street—for all its turnover—still remains the single world class street in town.

Hats off to the survivors.

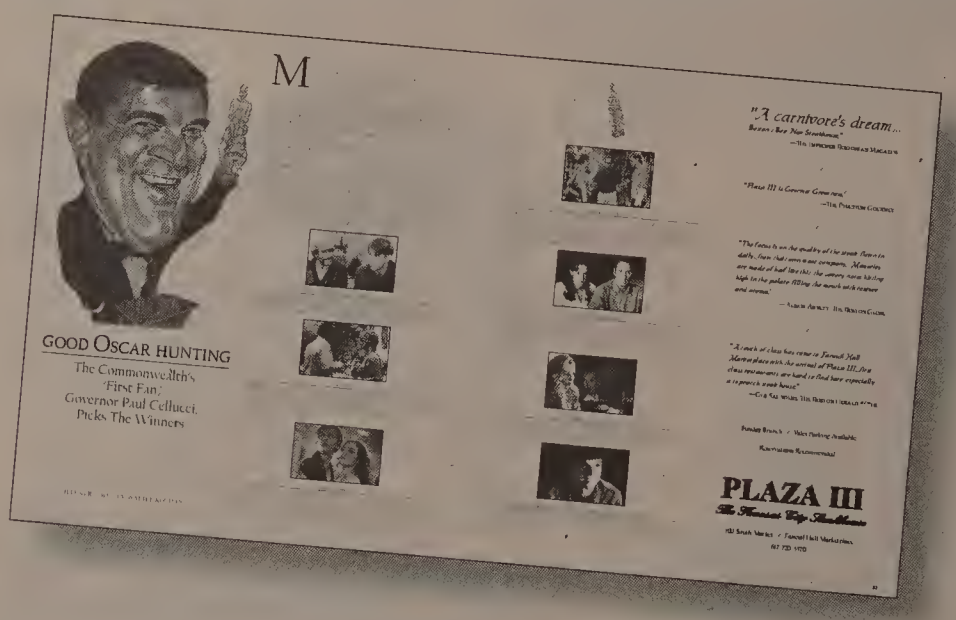
Forever And Ever...Damon

Governor Cellucci's right. Good Will Hunting should be crowned best picture. It should get the Oscar for Robin Williams' soliloquy on intimacy. It was by far the best movie of the year I saw, and I saw all the nominees.

If Titanic wins, it will reflect the values of the times, celebrity for celebrity's sake, form over substance. Special effects in place of real stuff.

Good Will Hunting was about something that's important, and it both entertained and stimulated the viewer to think about a variety of issues.



Titanic is a saccharine love story set against a disaster. And we all know how it ends. Give me Matt Damon and company any day.

UnCommon Reaction

Wanted to drop a quick note saying that I liked Jonathan Soroff's interview with Anthony Clark (Soroff/On, March 11). I also wanted to say I think it's BS that Clark didn't cry when his lame show, Boston Common, got canceled. I mean, he HAD his own sit-com. Aren't you suppose to cry and be upset when you get a little taste of stardom and then have it whisked away from you like that? I couldn't care less if Clark cried or not but I just want to know the truth—was he really "relieved" that his show was canceled? I can't see Clark breathing a sigh of relief when the producer cuts him loose. What I do see is Clark freaking out and keying a cherry-red BMW in some L.A. studio parking lot. The truth is out there... I want to know it.

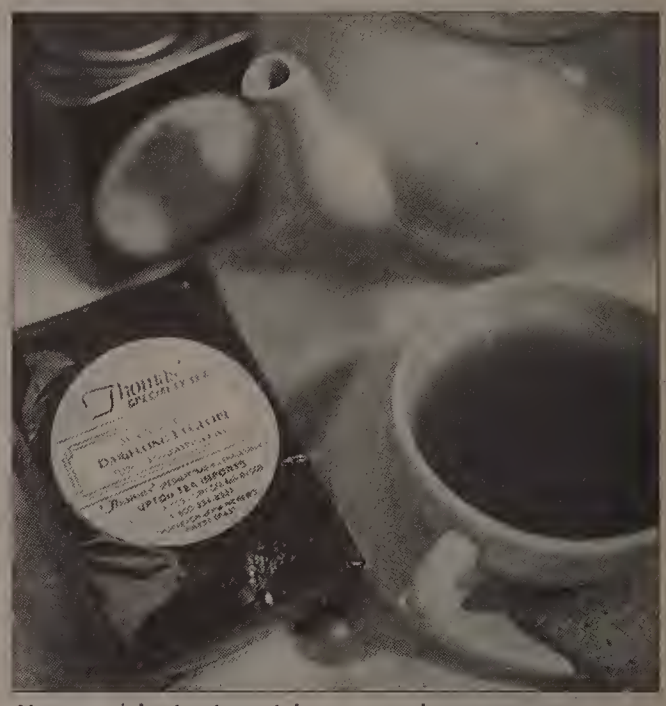
Mopsy

A cafe with all the atmosphere you can drink.

A Dorm Room for Grownups



Right next to the Somerville Theater, which it resembles in style, is the Someday Café, where Allen Ginsberg would have felt right at home.

WHAT WITH THE HEGEMONIC CLUTCH OF EVERY streetcorner by the Coffeebucks chain, shaggy dives for latter day java beatniks have become desperately precious. The Someday Café in Davis Square has all the atmosphere you can drink, and a setup that includes squashy old sofas that never stay in the same place, but get moved around to accommodate intense, bull-sessiony many-angled conversations. Which makes Someday seem more like a party or a college dorm than the places where, says one of the owners, everything is "well-rounded and all the same." Of course, there's a "good sturdy cup of joe," espresso drinks and lattes. There's also chai, a tea-based drink flavored with vanilla, ginger or honey wafting in from Oregon. From the "Sorry, We're Open" sign, to the occasional darkness in one of the rooms (yes, it was an electrical thing; more to the point, what they call "our Zen style" meant they didn't fix it right away, so you can chalk it up to style) to the absolutely enormous biscotti, to the signs advertising a "Walk For Ennui" and "Relationship Counseling—For You And Your Guitar" bespeaks the land of the non-standardized, man. While customers they look more like semipermanent residents, including students, gay people, downtowners looking to truly relax—sit there and read for hours ("You rent your chair by buying a cup of coffee") or relate exuberantly, wonderful loud music plays fervently.

Con-Oh-Sir! of Tea

Tea is a many-flavored thing and you can order about 100 different kinds from Upton Tea, which keeps you informed with a quarterly bulletin. 1-800-234-8327.

THE CURE FOR TOO MUCH COFFEE IS TEA. AND TEA, pingingly refreshing, allows its drinkers the same obsession-with-variety that wine-lovers adore. It would be hard to find the minutely differentiated kinds of tea in a store that you can get, without budging from your bone-china teapot and cushy chair, that you can procure by phone from Upton Tea. Your bible here is the Upton Tea Quarterly that lays out the scoop on more than 100 varieties of tea, which is sold only in loose-tea form, never bags. Rather than going the whole-box route, this tea is sold in any one of seven amounts, beginning with the little taster-size sample costing a dollar or two, up to the heavy-commitment kilo. You learn, for instance the "China Keemun is often called the burgundy of China teas." and each description provides a mini-biography of the tea in question. Tempting talk about these Teas of India and Teas of China has a wine-like lexicon that speaks of "toasty" or "peppery" flavor notes, "reddish liquor" and "mellow flavor." The smoky flavor of Lapsang Souchong has been compared to the charcoal-like taste of single malt scotch. You'll want to have many different teas, for each moment, or mini-season of the day. The tea comes rushing by overnight express, wrapped protectively in a paper sleeve wrapped in foil. Right now is the fresh harvest time, so hurry.

You can pick a tea to match your mood.

Become a Boston By Foot Tour Volunteer and get to know the city's architecture. The training involves six Saturdays starting April 18. 367-2345.

PEOPLE INTERESTED IN HISTORY, OR ARCHITECTURAL HISTORY, who want a chance to Bring It Alive! could get their chance by becoming a Boston By Foot volunteer. For the laughably-low fee of $85, a tab that would make a college student salivate, these volunteers are trained by professors in five Saturday classes running from 10-3 in the history of, successively, The Colonial City, The Federal City, The Victorian City, The Contemporary City, The Subterranean City (including Colonial crypts and the city's new subconscious, the Big Dig) ending with Final Footwork. From this mini-education deliciously relevant to living in Boston, graduation results in a "job" that entails giving eight tours during the season (May-October) in tandem with another guide. Auditors can take all six courses for $120, or $30 per session. As a high-quality course, more "cold roast Boston" than the loud-miked variety, it's stocked by interesting and interested people (the working young, the inspired-retired etc.) and requires a paper, a written test and a practice "road test" walking and talking in the midst of our amazing everyday treasures.

Becoming a volunteer tour guide is a priceless history lesson.

Loosely Speaking

Turner

BOSTON'S MILLION-MAN-MARCH-MADNESS

Never underestimate the Globe's talent for obscuring the story. Wayne Turner, as described in a big Globe sports-front story last week, is a record-setting college basketball player for Kentucky, the MVP of this season's SEC tournament, a key player in this and last year's March Madness. While the Globe mentioned, in passing, that Turner was from Boston, the article failed to even mention where he went to high school—Chestnut Hill's exclusive Beaver Country Day School—never mind where he grew up and lives—Roxbury—or how he got from the latter to the former.

Turner was recruited and mentored by Albert Rue, the assistant coach at Beaver, once a hoop legend in Boston playgrounds. Rue became a Boston cop, and took under his wing in the Police Athletic League any number of talented, underprivileged kids. Like Turner, who was raised by his grandmother, sans parents.

Upon graduation from Beaver in 1995, Turner, one of the best liked kids in school, was also voted "Most Likely to Make a Million."

SHE DOESN'T WANNA WAIT

You've been on Mars—or at least the moon—if you haven't heard about the hoopla surrounding the Volkswagen Beetle's reintroduction to the US market. Much of that noise has been generated by the good folks at Arnold Communications in Boston, the ad agency responsible for getting the message out. And getting out it is, because dealers from Massachusetts to Malibu report they are sold out even before the $15,000 car hits the market early next month. While Arnold's ads don't use celebrities, that doesn't mean that the car that Hitler made famous is not turning a few well-known heads. Take, for instance, the carmaker's pact with the Lilith Fair concert tour. The car with pop mystique and engine-in-the-front has been named the official car of the 1998 female fest.

At least one Lilith headliner wants her VW bug now. A car dealer on the Left Coast (who asked to remain nameless) said he received a call seeking a yellow bug for none other than Rockport homegirl and Berklee baccalaureate Paula Cole.

Cole

Other celebs such as Eddie Vedder of Pearl Jam and the multi-personalitied Tracey Ullman are rumored to be bug hunting. As for the common folk, at Brookline Volkswagen, for instance, there's a wait of up to three months for a loaded Beetle.

THE WALLS MAY HAVE EARS BUT LUCKILY NO TONGUES

Marking the end of an era in Back Bay, partygoer/giver Smoki Bacon and her husband Dick Concannon have put their townhouse at 9 Fairfield St. up for sale. The couple hopes to find something smaller, and a few blocks closer to their grandchildren, who live with their parents, Hillary and Christopher Gabrielli, on ultra-posh Louisberg Square.

Meanwhile, anyone with $1.6 million can buy the storied home where Smoki has entertained just about everybody you've ever heard of. The house, listed with Itzkhan and Marchiel, has four floors, a garden, a library, six bedrooms and parking space for one car.

CALL IT AN EARLY NIGHT—STILL

The first effort in decades to expand nightclub hours beyond the city's legal limit of 2 am went down with a whimper March 12. The Boston Licensing Board unanimously voted against the request of the Roxy to extend the hours that dancing could go on from 2 to 4 am. The proposal was knocked dead without debate, with the board calling the notion "impossible."

BUT WILL THEY EVER GET RID OF THE DISINFECTANT SMELL?

Get set to bid adieu to Park Square's Tar Bar and Hub Pub, which, along with what was the Thai restaurant next door, are due to be defunct, making room for renovation of the block.

SO MANY KNOW-IT-ALLS, SO LITTLE MEDIA

Hip artists and groovy stores come and go. Especially in the South End. But, a year ago, these guys caught our eye and we wrote them up, mainly because of the name. Marcello Albanese and Gary Knell formed a business in 1990 that designed and made frolicsome, functional household things. They called it *f.*kia, which, they admitted, stood for "fucking know it all," in honor they said, of "a friend."

Macklin

Come to find out, in Boston magazine's March cover story, in 1993 a gal named Ned Hand opened a store in the South End that sold just the same kind of thing. And what do you think it was called?

But Boston magazine said "F.KIA," as they printed it, commemorated her.

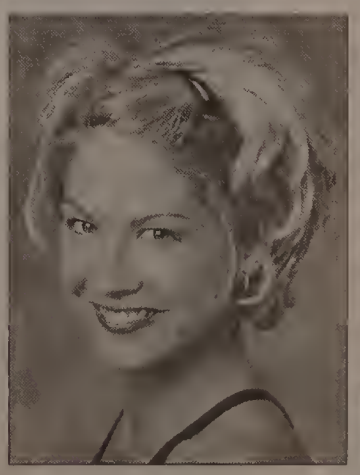
Which, after all, may be the case. "She's my girlfriend," says Albanese. But is she the eponymous *f.*kia? "Well, you tell reporters things, and they kinda say what they want to say. I'll leave it at that."

INNOCENT TIL PROVEN REDUNDANT

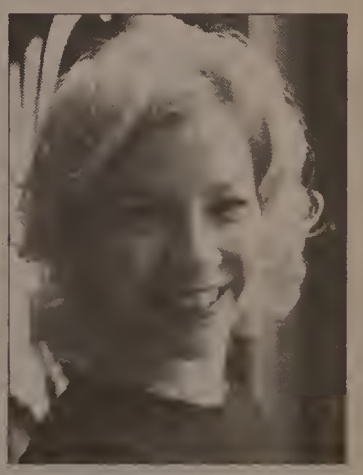
It's been nine months since Channel 7 suspended reporter Mike Macklin after he was arrested on the 4th of July for allegedly assaulting his girlfriend.

At the time, Macklin assured his bosses the charges would be dropped, and, he said, they assured him, if his case was favorably resolved, he'd be invited back to work.

With the girlfriend having recanted, the case is up for dismissal April 1. Macklin said he is "optimistic that Channel 7 will offer me the opportunity to return to my job."



Macklin has been absent from the airwaves and persona non grata at Channel 7, where he had been working as a freelancer while hoping to gain fulltime reporter status. A veteran TV newsman, he'd been working freelance after having been laid off in the '80s.



"He's history at Channel 7, and it's not just about his legal problem. It's because he's what Channel 7 calls 'older talent,'" said a former station official.

Macklin says he remains undaunted. He's been working freelance for Fox News, covered the Louise Woodward trial for London TV and appeared on the Geraldo Rivera Show.

Mike Carson, the station's vice president, said he'd welcome Macklin's return, but Channel 7 doesn't need freelancers.

CITY HAUL

Forget Will Hunting. Meet Lee Litif.

First there was the poetry slam. Lee Litif delivers the poetry wallop. After he clocks off the early morning shift as a city-employed street sweeper in downtown Boston, Litif turns his soul-motor on and writes stream-of-consciousness incantations that are at once funny, mysterious and uplifting. On Monday, April 6, he headlines the Stone Soup Poetry presentation at T.T. the Bear's in Cambridge.

In his broad Boston accent, the infectiously upbeat Litif talks about his new show, "Turn the Rectal Page." He pulls from his bookbag the art volumes that have given him inspiration (Freak Show: Sideshow Banner Art and Boris Vallejo's Fantasy Calendar), as well as reference books like The Endangered English Dictionary.

"When I'm in a coffeeshop, I have to have these books with me, no doubt about it. I try to put a good word into the picture when I look at it. Like try to find a different word for beauty, for elegant, for radiance."

Litif's is the real Southie story of self-discovery. He still lives in the old neighborhood with his mom, far from the bohemian haunts. He discovered his calling in 1991. After hearing his poems, one might think the epiphany came from being hit by a thesaurus delivery truck. Litif's expulsive rants are the product of a hunger for learning and practice, practice, practice. "Right now, I put every esophagus, every toothache, every cranium and every eyeball in whatever I'm writing. I try to make sure that I'm not generic." And it shows.

Snappy Answers to Stupid Questions

Following the opening night of Oscar Wilde: Diversions and Delights, Ken Ruta's one-man show, playing at the newly rehabbed Copley Theatre, a reception was held at Napoleon's, the legendary gay bar in Bay Village. Overheard by the bar: one clueless woman asked her friend, "Where's the ladies room?"

The friend laughed and answered, "They're all ladies rooms."

She lives in Mansfield and has been a model at Maggie, Inc. on Newbury Street for four years.

Jazz It Up

Because of its worldly rhythmic nature, The Boston World Jazz Project's virgin release has created quite a stir in the local music scene. Produced and arranged by Boston drummer Dan Vigden—who pawned his own musical equipment and hocked his car to come up with the dough for studio time—the first release by the project features two dozen players. Titled Beautiful Love after the Victor Young song, it continues to grace the playlist of smooth-jazz radio station, WSJZ. The disc, which has originals as well as cover tunes—like Cole Porter's I Love Paris*—will be available at Tower and HMV record stores in April.*

Put away the martinis and the paté, break out the beer and chips. Now that the Oscars are over, it's time to refocus on the finish of that other March sporting event, the NCAA College Basketball Tournament. March Madness finally winds down as this year's champions are crowned. The women's semifinals air Friday, March 27, 7 pm on ESPN and the championship game airs Sunday, March 29, 8:30 pm, also on ESPN. The men's semifinals start at 5:30 pm on Saturday, March 28 on Channel 4. The championship games airs on primetime on Monday, March 30. Watch for withdrawal symptoms such as irritability, cramps...

LIFE BEFORE THE FONZ: The programming whiz kids at Nick at Nite have compiled a marathon of first episodes, debuts and openers for Wednesday night (March 25, 8:30 pm, Nickelodeon). Of particular interest: an episode of Love, American Style ("that's me and yooou") that served as the pilot for Happy Days. Entitled "Love and the Happy Days," the episode features a post-Opie Ron Howard and Anson Williams as Potsie. (Wednesday, March 25, 10:30 pm, Nickelodeon)

IF YOU LIKE SHORT SHORTS: It's not that great a movie, but 1979's The Fish That Saved Pittsburgh (Thursday, March 26, 8 pm, Channel 68) features some old-school basketball greats from the pre-Magic and Larry days. Julius "Dr. J" Erving, Meadowlark Lemon and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar star in this comedy about astrology and basketball. Also features Flip Wilson and Marv "Yessss!" Albert.

WATCH OUT FOR THAT LION: 1953's Bwana Devil (Friday night/Saturday morning, March 27, 12:30 am, AMC) is not a good movie. Actually, it can be quite tasteless at times. But it was the first commercial feature released in "shocking" 3-D. Plus, it has the word Bwana in the title. Stars Robert "Unsolved Mysteries" Stack.

YES, THERE IS A GOD: After years of ratings-smashing specials, Fox premieres World's Wildest Police Videos (Thursday, April 2, 8 pm, Channel 25). Hosted by retired Lt. Sheriff John Bunnell Hosts, this series shows police surveillance videos of chases, raids and shoot-outs.

THE BOSTON DO SOMETHING BALL: The World Trade Center was host on Saturday, March 7, to a gala party to raise money for young people interested in helping to build—or, in some cases, re-build—their communities. The Boston Do Something chapter is a local network of the national group founded by television actor Andrew Shue. The third annual ball raised funds for grants of up to $500 to youth groups.

SALUTE TO SYMPHONY: On Monday, March 9, WCRB radio hosted a party at Symphony Hall prior to the special concert that featured BSO music director Seiji Ozawa, Boston Pops conductor Keith Lockhart, former Pops conductors John Williams and Harry Ellis Dickson. The concert, to be broadcast April 3 by WCVB-TV channel 5 and simulcast on WCRB, was hosted by WCVB's Natalie Jacobson and Chet Curtis. The 28th annual Salute to Symphony weekend will include broadcasts on WCRB to help raise money for Symphony.

Tweedy Hurt becomes smitten with Priestley.

MOVIES

A Same-Sex '90s 'Lolita'

By Betsy Sherman

John Hurt is grand and Jason Priestley simply delightful in this Love and Death

THERE'S MUSIC IN THE TOBACCO-GRATED voice of Giles De'Ath, English intellectual, as he reflects back on his quest. Actor John Hurt embodies this man, mummified in tweed, who improbably becomes the smitten stalker of a teen idol. Love and Death on Long Island is an inspired and mostly delicious movie about the rubbing together of cultures high and low, British and American, 19th century and 20th. In it, Hurt gives a supremely enjoyable performance.

British director-writer Richard Kwietniowski, who adapted the novel by Gilbert Adair, lavishes loving attention to detail in all the story's milieus, from London gentleman's club to trash-film pastiche. However, this magic carpet does crash prematurely. The movie's final passages are frankly disappointing, and the ending is stuffy. But Hurt is grand, and he is complemented by nice work from Beverly Hills 90210's Jason Priestley as the to-die-for boy whose screen presence makes Giles come alive.

The acid-witted writer Giles (last name pronounced DAY-ahth) functions without such conveniences as a word processor or answering machine. He feels no need for diversion from films or television. It is implied that his late wife helped form his roster of tastes, and that he has been coasting with them ever since. Until the day, that is, when he is locked out of his home and ducks into a cinema. Instead of an E.M. Forster adaptation, he witnesses the spectacle of Hotpants College 2. The movie's Porky's pranksters bully a high-schooler, who ends up laid out on the fast-food counter adorned with ketchup. Giles, in an epiphany, sees the marble-skinned, blue-eyed boy as if he were a martyred saint in a neo-classical painting.

Hotpants' Mikey is played by Ronnie Bostock (Priestley), whose photo Giles chances to see in a British teen magazine ("Hollywood's most snoggable fellows"). The California breeze enters his stuffy library. He buys a VCR so he can catch up on Ronnie's movies (drive-in fodder Tex Mex and Skid Marks), without realizing he needs a TV to connect it to. He fills a scrapbook with "Bostockiana," taking note that Ronnie has a home near the Hamptons. In a lecture, Giles rhapsodizes on "the discovery of beauty where no one ever thought to look for it."

Giles takes the potentially foolhardy step of trying to meet the object of his desire in three-dimensional form. The Englishman is a source of curiosity in dull Chesterton, Long Island (although with the trees bare and clouds out of a Constable painting, the story fortunately doesn't play fish-out-of-water too broadly). Maury Chaykin is deadpan amusing as the proprietor of the diner Chef d'Irv. Irv is a closeted gay who recognizes another one in Giles, and tries to steer him towards more swinging parts of the island. Giles keeps mum about his purpose. Unable to drive, he walks the suburban streets, seeking out Ronnie's house.

Giles chats up Ronnie's model girlfriend Audrey (Fiona Loewi), then gets to meet the man himself, who looks dreamy as he takes meditative walks by the seashore with his dog. Giles, doing a bit of acting himself, tries to convince Ronnie that he can break away from the fluff by starting his career over again in Europe.

The story harks back to Nabokov's Lolita and its acerbic Humbert Humbert—refashioned for the '90s with a same-sex object of desire and an emphasis on the ability of media and celebrity to invade even the most sheltered life. At its best, Love and Death is an equal opportunity lampooner, but it ultimately breaks its embrace of the pop world. That isn't because of any deficiency in Priestley's performance (with Cold-Blooded, he's building a good indie track record). The script lets Ronnie down, and provides a cardboard Audrey (she and Giles have a confrontation that's Spellingesque). Priestley puts into action Giles' newly minted theories on film acting, shifting with ease among a repertory of physical attitudes. His sizzle is as necessary as Hurt's steak. ✦

The Man! The Myth!

By Tom Weisend

Jack Connors singlehandedly put Boston on the advertising map

JACK CONNORS WOWED THE AD COMMUnity in Boston last month by selling his agency—Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos—to New York conglomerate Interpublic Group for what is believed to be in excess of $100 million. After 30 years of some of the best on-the-record and off-the-record tales ever to be told in Boston, Hill, Holliday achieved a level that no other agency could: It was the first ad agency in the city's corporate history to become known for its personality, not just its products.

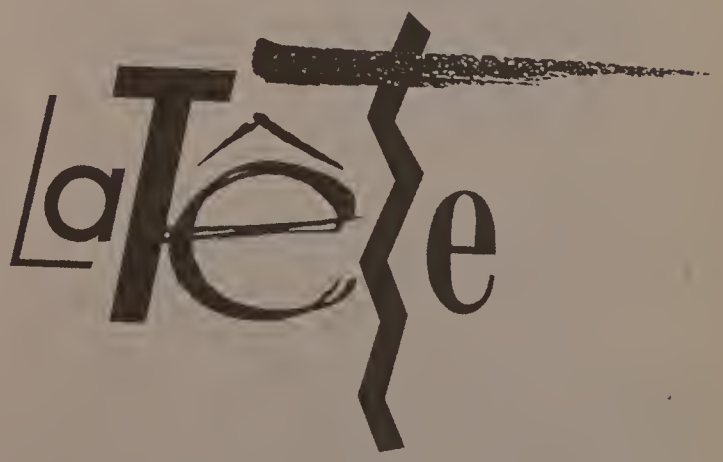
Veni, vidi, vici.

Who can begrudge Connors for reaping the millions? He's one of the hardest-working people in the Boston business community. Hill, Holliday's rise single handedly put Boston on the map as an advertising center in the early '80s. When most of the city's agencies were getting by on scraps and low-profile industrial accounts, Hill, Holliday was making Wang Laboratories the envy of the technology world with its extravagant, $40 million TV campaign.

It created what judges at a venue no less impressive than Cannes considered to be the single best advertisement in the world in 1986, the "Real Life, Real Answers" for John Hancock.

And it made the myth that advertising can be fun into a reality. Legends of Connors' fits of pique that came to be called "Jack Attacks" put Connors on Fortune magazine's "Toughest Bosses" list a few years back. But his friends quickly remind you of the time one of Connors' employees and friends was losing his house to foreclosure and Connors went to the bank auction and purchased the house so his friend's family could remain in it.

In its 30-year history, the agency's culture has changed with the times. Hill, Holliday's adolescence was during the swinging '70s, and tales of intra-office sex and trips to sanitariums to dry out are still tossed about by former (and some current) employees.



In the '80s, when Hill, Holliday and the business world grew up, the agency moved to sleek offices on the 39th floor of the Hancock Building and started resembling the real corporations that were becoming its clients. In addition to Wang and Hancock, a Who's Who of Boston businesses has graced the agency's roster: BayBank, Jordan Marsh, the Boston Globe, Reebok International, Lotus Development Corp. and the Massachusetts Lottery, to name a few. Akin to the court of Louis XVI, internal politics was the rule at the agency. But acknowledging that times were changing, the agency set up an onsite day care center, offered employees four months' paid leave to work for a non-profit organization and named an openly gay man as president.

The agency's rise mirrored that of the Boston ad community. New agencies with names like Kelley and Wallwork, Rizzo Simons Cohn and Welch Currier Curry popped up, headed by talented people who earned their stripes at Hill, Holliday and moved on to make a go at earning their own fortunes. Ad directors at companies like Gillette and Hasbro, who would never even give Boston shops a second look in 1980, were working with Boston shops a decade later.

This is reading a bit like an obituary. It shouldn't. No one loses his job. No client conflicts need to be sorted out. Connors, 55, has assured all concerned that he'll be around at least until the next Winter Olympics. Boston's not losing its unique piece of ad history. It's gaining another chapter in the legend. ✦

We're not afraid of change so why should you be.

Hunter brings his jazz to the Middle East in April.

MUSIC

A Different Vibe

By Paul Robicheau

Guitarist Charlie Hunter wouldn't want to dis you

CHARLIE HUNTER LIKES TO KEEP everyone guessing. The guitarist's last disc was a revision of Bob Marley's classic Natty Dread album with the Charlie Hunter Quartet, sporting a drummer and two saxophonists. And his new CD of original music drops the saxes for a vibraphonist and percussionist.

"You've got to keep one step ahead of the game at all times," says Hunter, who brings his breezy hybrid of jazz and groove to the Middle East April 4. "Not just for the media and for the audience that wants to hear something different, but for yourself, so you don't get all burned out. That's not what people pay to see. They pay for some kind of excitement and enrichment in their lives. So it's kind of a dis to play something you've burned out."

One thing Hunter hasn't burned out is his eight-string guitar, by designer Ralph Novak. The unique instrument has a neck with fanned frets to allow different spacing for the high and low strings. "It's fanned out so the higher the string, the shorter the scale length," says Hunter, who can simultaneously play bass and guitar parts (and sometimes mimics the sound of an organ through his effects). "There's a lot of mixing and matching, and for the most part, on my right [fretting] hand, the thumb takes care of the bass and the fingers take care of the guitar parts."

On Hunter's new CD, Return of the Candyman (the title a good excuse for putting a clown's face on the cover), that guitar is backed by Pound For Pound, a group with jazz vibraphonist Stefon Harris and Afro-Cuban percussionist John Santos, plus longtime drummer Scott Amendola.

"It was just time for a change, a tonal change," the San Francisco-area native says on the phone from his new home in Brooklyn. "I had been going with that horn sound for so long, I felt it was time to try something different."

Indeed, Hunter's use of sax goes back to his 1993 debut Charlie Hunter Trio—whose tenor player Dave Ellis is joining survivors of the Grateful Dead in a new band called the Other Ones for this year's Furthur Festival. Hunter signed with famed jazz label Blue Note, and added a second sax to make a quartet (while he was launching Pound For Pound, his former alto player Calder Spanier was hit by a car and killed in December). Plus Hunter played in T.J. Kirk, a now-dormant group with three guitars and drums that mixed tunes by Thelonious Monk, James Brown and Rahsaan Roland Kirk.

Now Hunter has already trimmed Pound For Pound. With the busy Harris (a bright spot on Joe Henderson's recent Porgy & Bess project) unavailable and Amendola in California, the guitarist is touring with vibraphonist Monte Croft and drummer Willard Dyson—and no extra percussionist. "I liked the percussion," he says, "but I felt if I had a trio, I could move a lot of places stylistically that I couldn't really with the percussion there."

Hunter, 30, has been a lot of places stylistically since he grew up in the Bay Area, a "guitar kid" learning blues, rock and funk licks. "I had all my licks, and then I got to an age where I wanted to learn more how to play music and less how to play licks. So then I started transcribing Charlie Christian and Charlie Parker, got into Coltrane and took it from there."

He also absorbed hip-hop, going back to days at Berkeley High. "There were dudes who were always rhyming outside at lunchtime and into mixing with turntables," Hunter says. "That stuff was always going on, it was a part of growing up." He served as a sideman with the Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy, and still digs the Wu-Tang Clan and A Tribe Called Quest.

In turn, Hunter is reaching a different crowd at the Middle East than the one he once played to at the Regattabar. "It's a different vibe," he says, with no pun intended. "You can get pumped up and have a good time." ✦

Galleria Goes to Newton

By Nini Diana

Michelena doubles up...fish farming... organic oral sex

AMBITIOUS CHANGES ARE UNDER WAY at Galleria Italiana, from the logistical to the romantic. First off, the team of Rita D'Angelo and Marisa Iocco, co-owners of Galleria and La Bettola, plus John Mascia, their general manager, plans to open a new restaurant in Newton Centre. And Ron Suhanowsky, Galleria's chef, is slated to move to the new place when it opens, as is La Bettola's pastry chef, Colleen Marnel, who also just happens to be Suhanowsky's fiancee. Hope they really like being together....The new addition will have an Italian menu with lower prices than the Boston restaurants.

Chef Rene Michelena of La Bettola.

La Bettola's chef, Rene Michelena, already considered one of the very best in the country, will take over the chef duties for both Boston restaurants. In addition, plans are in the works for another restaurant to be helmed by Michelena with a "huge bar scene," said Mascia, who will oversee all the expansion in the next 18 months. He also hinted that plans were in the works for yet another restaurant, in a hotel, come summer of '99. Mascia acknowledged the expansion was "very aggressive," and then went one step farther, saying he and the "girls," as the co-owners are affectionately called, would also like to add a bakery onto Galleria.

Meanwhile, Michelle Guyer, pastry chef for Trotter's in Chicago, will guest chef at Galleria in April and diners can look forward to having Michael Schlow, late of Cafe Louis fame, team up with Michelena in May as a guest chef for La Bettola's one-year anniversary dinner.

With the demise of his outposts in Park Square—Red Herring and Beehive—chef Stan Frankenthaler has enlisted his chef de cuisine, James Scoon, to create a lighter bar menu for his main spot, Salamander. The dishes, which will be similar to what was served at Red Herring, include spring rolls, noodle stir-fry and grilled lamb "lollipops." Meanwhile, we'll be interested to see whether Frankenthaler branches out again and, if so, what new unappetizing name for a restaurant he can come up with.

Are you at all interested in aquaculture? Do you even know what it is? It's raising and cultivating fish on a farm and it is one of the hottest topics in the restaurant world these days. Its goal is to steady the price of seafood and provide consistent, high-quality fish. Probably only interesting to those in the business, but if you eat it you should know about it. Grill 23 and Bar, in conjunction with Boston Sea Farms and Aquanor, are holding a symposium on this very subject April 8. Could be lucrative, could be boring, but there will be free food.

I'm not a real health nut, it's true, and it is my firm belief that in some cases all-natural products have just gone outer limits. Take, for example, the new drink line called SoBe (South Beach) made, not in Miami as you might think, but in Connecticut. One of the drinks, Wisdom, includes St. John's Wort, reported to be an organic mood elevator. I prefer the Energy drink, which contains Yohimbe bark extract. That, my friends, is said to improve your sex life. ✦

Blissful Barbeque

By J. Charles Mokriski

Catfish, ribs, pulled pork, dirty rice and Zydeco in Southie

THE BRASH, WHIMSICAL DECOR OF THIS lively South Boston eatery is almost irresistible. An oversized replica of an alligator lurches from above the restaurant's front door toward Dorchester Street at Perkins Square. Zydeco's brightly lit, multi-level interior features an eclectic array of musical instruments and unusual fabric-veined fans suspended from its high ceiling, colorful splashes of neon lights, an array of 1950s beer advertisements and highway signs, a hardwood floor alternating with tiny green and blue tiles defining an alligator mosaic, brightly-hued upholstered booths, handsome metallic composition tables framed in sturdy wood and big clean bathrooms. Zydeco's waitresses are ever helpful, warning us with an alert eye to our seven year-old, that the "dirty rice" is studded with chicken livers and that he might prefer the Cajun rice or potatoes.

Zydeco has an astoundingly large and varied selection of beers. Ten are available on draught, with an additional 60 in bottles, ranging from Voodoo Lager to Pilsner Urquel. The draughts, all served by the pint and starting at $3.25, include the usual suspects from close to home and a number from farther afield. We enjoyed the Harpoon IPA, light and slightly bitter; Wild Goose Porter from Maryland, rich amber color and full bodied flavor and the heavier, slightly sweet Newcastle Brown Ale. There is also a small, perfunctory wine list.

A meal at Zydeco gets off to a good start with a mug of gumbo ($1.95), a deliciously spicy brew chock full of crunchy vegetables including celery, carrots and the ubiquitous okra. The Cajun clam chowder ($1.95 a mug) was almost as good, a trifle floury, but with an intriguingly pleasant flavor and chunks of firm textured potatoes. Large slabs of cornbread made an excellent accompaniment to the soup.

Other starters included the Bayou catfish fingers ($5.95), moist, white fleshed strips of fish that had been lightly battered and deep fried to a delicate, golden turn, served with a mustardy rémoulade Not so successful was a quarter pound bucket of shrimp ($4.95), about 10, peel your own shrimp, served in a small galvanized pail. We found them bereft of flavor and mealy.

Main courses ranged from the superb barbeque choices to regrettably overwrought and unsuccessful Cajun selections. Of the barbeque, we tried both the St. Louis spareribs and the Memphis dry rubbed babybacks (both $8.95 a half-slab). The former were rich, meaty behemoths with a smoky-sweet, artery-clogging layer of deliriously delicious fat. The Memphis dry rubbed babybacks were smaller and leaner, but with a flavor no less satisfying. The flesh of both kinds of ribs was pink, not charred, evidence that they were slow-smoked in careful, traditional fashion. Another barbeque offering, the North Carolina pulled pork ($8.95), was tender and moist, with a distinctive flavor balanced between tart and sweet. The dish would have been better if served hotter and without the soggy piece of white bread underlying the huge mountain of pork.

Far less successful than the barbeque was the Crawfish Etouffee ($9.95). While we were impressed by the plentiful mound of crawfish, we soon regretted the choice, since these hapless "mud bugs" were lost in a morass of ponderous, gelatinous sauce seasoned only with excessively hot but flavorless pepper. Equally unsuccessful was the blackened snapper ($8.95), a tough, rubbery piece of fish, again distinguished by the simultaneous lack of flavor and excess of pepper. Side dishes at Zydeco, however, were uniformly terrific: Cajun rice laced with chopped peppers; mildly bitter collard greens; thin, crispy sweet potato fries and big, moist steak fries labeled "Cajun taters." These and other side dishes accompany the main courses and are also available a la carte at 95 cents to $1.50.

Zydeco's dessert included a humongous mound of bread pudding ($1.95), redolent of cinnamon and garnished with whipped cream. More spectacular was a wedge of sweet potato pecan pie ($2.95), light, crunchy, sweet but not cloying, and served warm with generous dollops of whipped cream.

The name Zydeco, according to a college with New Orleans roots, is derived from the colloquial observation, "Les haricots ne sont pas salé"—the beans are not salty—when it is pronounced with a Cajun twang. It has come to be associated with a genre of Cajun folk music. While there is no live music at Zydeco, and while the Cajun food offerings definitely take a backseat to the barbeque, this folksy, comfortable eatery delivers real value in a cheerful, upbeat environment. ✦

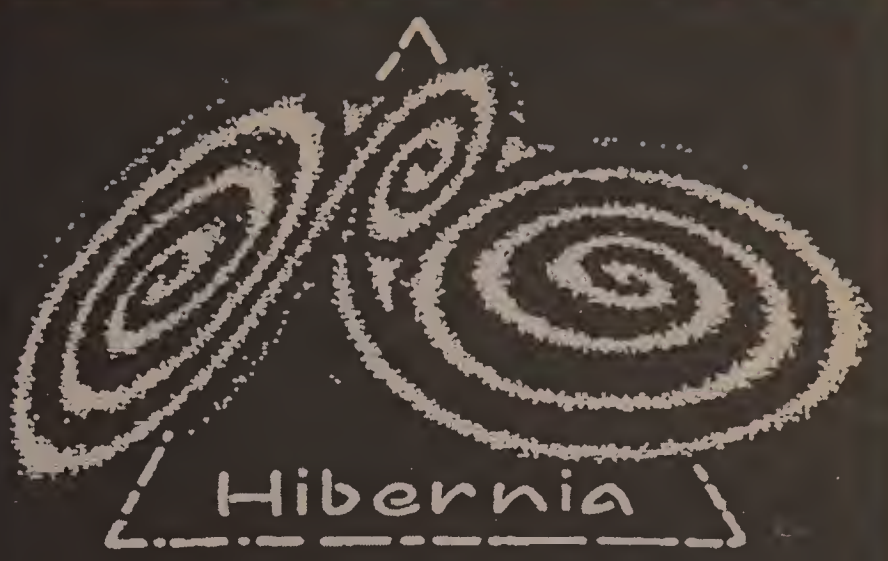
WINE

Que Syrah, Syrah

By Sandy Block

Hearty Syrah grapes, almost incognito, reclaim their place on the world wine stage

SYRAH'S A GUTSY WINE. ITS BOLD, FIERY flavors captivate you with their charm and it's rarely outclassed by food. Because it's so adaptable and easy to appreciate, the wine makes friends and inspires trust. In the era of the steakhouse, it's the perfect cabernet alternative, offering no less quality but a different range of flavors. Little wonder then there's a virtual frenzy among California vintners, who may have been late coming to the party but are now determined to find Syrah vines to plant.



The most famous French Syrahs often are bottled and labeled with no mention of the grape at all but star billing given to the prestigious appellations, such as Hermitage, Cornas and Cote Rotie. The Australians, who've done the best job so far at taming the wines' wild, gamey side, use the name "Shiraz" (a legal synonym for Syrah that's also caught on in South Africa) on their labels and dozens of other world-class Syrah-based wines are blends bottled as Chateauneuf du Pape, for instance.

Perhaps the most widely noted characteristic of Australian Shiraz is its round, supple fruitiness. This is the number one red grape grown in the country, accounting for more than a quarter of all vine plantings. Its history ranges back to the earliest European colonists in the 18th century. The cooler regions, such as Victoria or Margaret River in Western Australia, tend to produce grapes with anise-like, minty berry fruit flavors. Warmer areas, however, such as the Barrossa and Hunter Valleys, emphasize the grapes earthier, more peppery side. It's possible to make Shiraz in the style of a Beaujolais, in which case the tannins are downplayed and the berry flavors dominate. The odds are that most Australian Shiraz in the $8 to $10 range are produced in this way. The more expensive wines are likely to have been made in a traditional manner and aged in oak so that they feature some vanilla scents along with richer fruit, fuller body and more tannin.

The French have been on a mad spree planting Syrah throughout Southern France in the past decade. This recent surge in popularity has increased French Syrah planting to more than 60,000 acres (to dwarf Australia's 12,000). The wines in this region tend to be perhaps a bit leaner than your average Shiraz, with more of an edge to their flavors, and perhaps an undertone of tobacco. The greatest French Syrahs are a world apart. Perhaps they're not better known because their appellations are so tiny. Both Hermitage and Cote Rotie, which are both divided among a few dozen growers, only make the volume of wine that a single large Bordeaux property produces each vintage.

Syrah ideally requires a warm, but not hot, climate to ripen, and Californians have been scrambling to identify suitable sights since the mid-'80s. At that time a small group of intrepid winemakers who were dubbed the Rhone Rangers began to make some very tasty wines with Syrah and other Rhone varietals. Clustered around Santa Barbara, this pioneering group continues today to be among the quality leaders in the state, creating wine with intensity and flavor, but perhaps not the dark, brooding character of some of the authentic Northern Rhones. Other areas in the state that have shown promise with their Syrahs include the Russian River of Sonoma, Mendocino and the Sierra Foothills. In general, you'll pay close to $20 to taste the bright, sunny fruit of most good Californian Syrah. ✦

Herbal gerbils and glamour pigs alike will appreciate the natural goodies at your local B&C.

Back To Beauty Basics

What companies make inexpensive organic products with potent, yet safe, amounts of herbal extracts? That is the number one question asked of me by you readers.

I say go straight to the gurus of herbal knowledge: the sales staff at Bread and Circus's body care and nutrition department. The testers and I agree their customer service is unbeaten. And they offer a wide range of products as natural as dulcimers and as politically correct as Sting.

Here's a list of B&C herbal goods that satisfied the testers'—and my—craving for natural treatments that don't suck:

Ivy's soon-to-be-legendary line of bath and body treats puts you in touch with your inner princess. Soaking with Ivy's Bath Gems doesn't take you away; it brings you back—to a more relaxed life. Use your Bath Gems as a body scrub, too. Ivy's lotions, shower gels and bath oils are all subtly permeated with jasmine, ylang ylang, organic orange peel and neroli, leaving your skin hyper-soft and with the most lovely, trigger-free scent that'll help you survive yesterday's stresses. Giving Ivy's goodies to a gal pal who is in distress is like giving her a long lasting, sisterly hug. Now, that's cruelty free!

I have never been a fan of organic hair-care lines—something to do with the sticky buildup of pesticide-free slime that leaves my hair dirtier than it began. But many testers and readers urged me to give the Giovanni line a try, and zowweee!—were they on to something. This extensive brand of shampoos, conditioners and styling aids, packed with vitamins, minerals and herbs, feels like a costly salon line, for a much better price.

Sensitive-skinned Mother Nature-lovin' types can soothe and hydrate their mugs with the Camocare line of irritation-free cleansers that really rinse off and moisturizers that pamper without greasiness. Found other AHA creams and lotions too harsh? Try Camocare's mild but effective fruit acid-based AHAs for a skin that glows like the star that you are.

Some men tell me they feel rushed and uncomfortable when buying grooming aids at a drug- or department store. My testing dudes tend to take more time, read labels thoroughly, and ask questions that get them what they want when they shop in the ying—and yang— friendly setting of a health food market. So march your male or female butt over to Bread and Circus and start to browse. I know I have a lot of confidence in their selections. With seven Bread and Circus markets in the Boston area, there is bound to be one near you. Stay healthy, kids!

Grease Is The Word

America's favorite pole waxer has many more uses.

When that cute lil' Easter Bunny comes hippity-hoppiting down the trail, you know spring is here. Sure, the change of season means crocuses and pussywillows will blossom, but the new weather also can bring major skin freakouts. If your springtime skin is dry, cracking or raw, soothe it quickly with this queen bee's mighty, but pure, royal jelly: Vaseline.

Vaseline is loved by my testers and celebrities alike. Eartha Kitt slathers a thin layer on her whole body before she heads for the steam room for purrrfectly smooth skin. Isaac Mizrahi uses it on his unzipped lips. Stop! In the name of glove: Diana Ross gobs it on her hands and feet before she covers them with mitts or socks.

Here are some other uses for this mineral miracle: Mix it with your matte lipsticks to soften their look. Vaseline is my testers' number one eye cream, especially for those with sensitive or dry eyelids or lashes. Since it will not clog pores, it's a perfect nightime face cream for super dry spots. Apply the thinnest layer possible to scaly areas. It's a perfect polish for patent leather; or, to prevent tub-tart skin, coat your bod with a thin layer before you hop in the bath. Let the hot water soak it in.

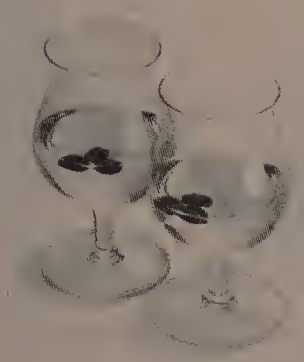
Vaseline is the only petroleum jelly that I would recomend for use on baby or kids' dry cheeks. It soothes, never stings and is less gritty or gasolene-y smelling than cheaper brands. And it makes a great lube when Mr. Goodwrench comes over!

Chanel eye pencils make their mark.

The Line Forms Here

Your search for the best eye pencil can stop right here. Chanel's brand spanking new Double Effect Eye Pencils could be the answer to your eye drawing needs. Used dry on upper lids, it goes on smooth and dense: perfect for a dame who takes a hard line. Gals who like to smudge their way to a softer cast will cherish Double Effect for its staying power and the dreamy way it sharpens.

If you've turned in the past to liquid liners for intensely dramatic lines, you will applaud Chanel's new pencil for your more laid-back days. Just dip the tip in a speck of water and paint away. Unlike liquid liner, you can blend the edges to soften the line.



Please, girls, no using saliva instead of water. Licking your pencil is way unsanitary. And it also doesn't work as well as the good ol' H_2O.

Unfortunately, this slick pencil is currently available in only four colors: a jet black, a reddish brown and dark and light blue. Rumor has it more shades will be coming soon. Find Double Effect Eye Pencils at any Chanel counter for $22.50.

from Hyde Park to HOLLYWOOD

Joe Tierney (inset) and daughter Maura have gone their separate but affectionate ways.

CAMERAS CLICK AND THE SPOTLIGHT SHINES ON THE CANDIDATE AS HE STANDS WITH HIS family in the cramped hall. "I coulda been a contender," JoeTierney declares, his boosters breaking into mad cheers.

That's how Hollywood might play out what was a real scene on November 3, 1987. The reality was that Joe Tierney, then 46 and a Boston city councilor since 1971—including an unprecedented five terms as council president—had just been smoked by a two-to-one margin in a primary challenge to then-Mayor Ray Flynn.

His concession speech that night at the Knights of Columbus Hall in Mattapan would be Joe Tierney's last big moment on Boston's high-profile political stage. But his daughter Maura was even by then finding her own life on a stage.

"She was always a performer," said Tierney, who now practices law on Commercial Wharf. "She was dancing as far back as I can remember. She even did the choreography and danced for the wedding of one of her high school teachers."

Before that, in the sixth or seventh grade, Maura won a citywide oratory contest. But Joe Tierney recalls slouching in his seat as she delivered her speech with a distinct Irish accent. "She must have picked it up from her speech coach," a native of Galway, Tierney said.

Maura attended suburban parochial schools during the ugly years of forced busing, although no child of the city, much less of a city politician, remained ignorant of the racial polarization surrounding it. Joe Tierney was an "anti-buser," although not with the vitriol of some of his colleagues like John Kerrigan and Louise Day Hicks. "Because her family and so many cousins were from Southie, Maura was familiar with busing," Tierney said. "She knew the total turmoil, but I really don't know if it had an impact on her."

Maura was in college by the time her father challenged Flynn, running in opposition to Flynn's endorsement of plans to desegregate public housing in South Boston, the neighborhood and political ocean for both men. Ray Flynn may have trounced Tierney citywide, but Tierney beat the mayor in South Boston, and even in Flynn's own precinct.

By that time, Maura was miles away, literally and figuratively, with her eyes on her own particular prize: acting. "She's a very intelligent girl," said the unbiased father. "She is a vociferous reader with a remarkable vocabulary. She had near-perfect scores on her verbals. She could have gone to any school, but always wanted New York University" and its acting program.

She done good.

But Hollywood hasn't dimmed Maura's family values, said Joe Tierney. Her sister Deidre was with her for the Los Angeles debut of Primary Colors. An "extended family gathering" will mark the Boston opening, Joe Tierney said, adding that Maura manages to still get back to her Hyde Park home several times a year.

Joe Tierney said he doesn't know anything about Mandy Grunwald, the Clinton presidential campaign aide and political consultant upon whom Maura's movie character is said to be based. But he did read Joe Klein's book upon which the movie is based. In another twist, Klein covered Tierney two decades ago when Klein toiled at Cambridge's weekly, the Real Paper.

Maybe Klein didn't write too well of Tierney, who panned Primary Colors. "It's one of the most poorly written books I've ever read," Tierney said.

But he looks forward to the movie—not that he's a cinema regular. "I usually don't go to the movies," he said. "I usually wait for Blockbuster." Liar, Liar was an exception. "It's thrilling to go and see Maura on the big screen. She's your daughter. But then you just get caught up in the character and she's not your daughter any more."

Tierney had his own theatrical moments. There was the time when he borrowed some gear from the fire department's underwater unit and hauled it into City Council chambers. "I put it in front of my desk and invited anyone in the tank with (then-Mayor Kevin White) who needed to be resuscitated to come over."

Like movie scenes, such moments of political drama can also get distorted by time.

"You wish you'd been there the time former City Councilor Joseph Tierney squeezed into a skin-tight scuba suit in a zany bid to make the argument that the legislative body was 'in the tank' with (White)," was the Boston Globe's December 29, 1995 version.

Joe Tierney chuckled at that. It would, after all, play so much better on the screen.

Soroff/ On MAURA TIERNEY

MAURA TIERNEY, 32, IS THE DAUGHTER OF FORMER BOSTON CITY councilor and one-time mayoral hopeful Joe Tierney. After attending NYU, she worked on several television series before landing the lead role, opposite Jim Carrey, in Liar, Liar. On NBC's hit sitcom News Radio, she plays acerbic reporter Lisa Miller and can currently be seen on the big screen as political spindoctor Daisy Green in the controversial political drama Primary Colors, based on Joe Klein's roman à clef. Candid and unpretentious, she shies away from telling tinseltown gossip. She recently finished shooting a film with Anthony Hopkins and Cuba Gooding Jr., and she lives in L.A. and New York with her husband, the actor Billy Morrissette.

Jonathan Soroff: Your father was known as a bit of a ham in the city council. Did you inherit your theatricality from him?
Maura Tierney: No. My mother is quietly dramatic, in her own way. She's not a hysteric or anything, but she's a passionate person.
JS: What's the difference between acting and politics?
MT: Oh, geez, not much, except the stakes are higher in politics. A bad acting job isn't gonna hurt anybody.
JS: Jim Carrey made $20 million for Liar, Liar. What did you get?
MT: None of your beeswax.
JS: In Primary Colors, your role is based on Mandy Grunwald?
MT: Not really. Everybody's saying who's who, and there are all these little graphs in magazines, but I met Joe Klein on the set. He said that the job was Mandy Grunwald's, but the character is based on a woman that he dated for several years.
JS: Who's sexier—Bill Clinton or John Travolta?
MT: I'd have to say John Travolta. I have a mistrust of southerners. It's awful, but it's true.
JS: Are Americans immature about sex?
MT: Y'know, Emma Thompson said to me, "Where's the scandal? I don't understand!" Europeans make you feel so provincial and puritanical, but really, it's a little appalling to think what's going on in the Oval Office.
JS: What do you miss most about Boston?
MT: The weather. The seasons. It's sunny here every damn day. It's so boring.
JS: You named your pug dog Rose Kennedy. Why?
MT: Because we wanted her to live forever.
JS: What one thing do you do that drives your husband crazy?
MT: I ash on the floor when I smoke, and put my cigarettes out in various coffee mugs and plates, etc.
JS: What one thing does your husband do that drives you crazy?
MT: He goes running every damn day, and he gets up early to do it.
JS: Which members of the News Radio cast have you seen naked?
MT: Just Andy Dick.
JS: How did I know you'd say that? He's aptly named?
MT: Yeah, he's an exhibitionist.
JS: Who's funnier—him or Phil Hartman?
MT: I can't possibly answer that. That's like Sophie's Choice.
JS: If you had a genie, name your three wishes.
MT: To live on the east coast...for my husband to let me get a Great Dane (because he won't) and...I don't know...to be a little wittier.
JS: In Primary Colors, you have an affair with a black man. Any reaction from your family?
MT: Well, it's not the first time. My specialty is having relationships with black men. That's all I ever do.
JS: Really?
MT: (Laughs) No! But I was on a TV show where I was the white girl going out with the black guy.
JS: What Boston thing do you remember most about your childhood?
MT: Taking the Orange Line to Downtown Crossing with my mother to go shopping.
JS: You went to parochial school—were the nuns evil, hateful witches?
MT: I can say, without compunction, that their goal in life was to crush our spirits. Every ounce of individuality that peeked through was immediately squashed.
JS: What movie best captures Boston?
MT: The Friends of Eddie Coyle. It was right on, and they sounded right. Actors usually do a bad job with Boston accents.
JS: Did you ever have one?
MT: Yeah, but I lost it in high school. Our drama teacher told us we had to.
JS: If your father had become mayor, how would Boston be different?
MT: My father would've been an excellent mayor. He's very smart, and he's truly not in politics for personal gain. He has a lot of integrity. That might've been his biggest problem.
JS: You were in Liar, Liar and you play a spindoctor in Primary Colors. What's the biggest lie you ever told?
MT: Oh my God. Well, I told my parents I'd graduated from NYU, and then I was outed in TV Guide, like it was some hot scoop. I told the reporter "Don't print that," but she did, and that's how my parents found out they'd wasted thousands of dollars.
JS: What's the last joke you heard?
MT: It's sort of tasteless. What does Ted Kennedy have that Bill Clinton wants? A dead girlfriend.
JS: What's the best part of celebrity?
MT: I'm not a celebrity, but I do get free things now. I've never quite understood why the more money you have, the more free stuff you get, but that seems to be how it works.
JS: What's the worst part?
MT: I used to walk around looking awful all the time. My husband would say, "I really admire you that you can leave the house looking like that." And now, I think, "Oh, God, what if someone recognizes me!"
JS: What's your pet peeve?
MT: People who don't get out of the fast lane drive me nuts.
JS: Spoken like a true Bostonian. So what's next for you?
MT: When I finish with work, my husband and I are going back to New York. We bought a house there in October and haven't set foot in it since. I hope I still like it.
JS: Well, tell Phil Hartman that I think he's funnier than God.
MT: That's not saying much. God has a lousy sense of humor. ✦

'THE MORE MONEY YOU HAVE, THE MORE FREE STUFF YOU GET'

WALLY'S WORLD

For 101-year-old Joseph "Wally" Walcott, the bar he started was a way to make some money and have some fun. It became a legend.

By Salvatore Tuzzeo

It's Monday night and I'm standing in what the regulars call the best bar in Boston—an undersized hole in the wall in a virtual wasteland of haunts with oversized humidors and trendy micro-brews. Wally's Café in the South End will have none of those ego-inflating amenities. Hell, for that matter, this place doesn't even have proper ventilation. The smoke wafts, dangles, fills the room—and my second-hand lungs alike.

But, hey, that's Wally's.

Photograph by Kathy Chapman

The festive mood of Wally's has remained the same despite the changes (top: circa 1950).

Old School: The original version of Wally's across the street from where it is today (bottom).

The band, a superfunky five piece called Jose Ramos and The Special Blend, has just finished a blazing cover of the Bill Withers classic "Use Me Up." Jose is well known around these parts for few reasons. "Well I grew up in this neighborhood...." I urge Ramos to continue. "...and I used to shine shoes outside of Wally's," he chuckles.

Even before the last note drifts away people begin to wail and shout and applaud. They're here to see Jose and company do what they do best—jam. I ask around and get to the meaning of this. "Here you've got a blues band as good as any on the east coast, and they're playing this place the size of bowling lane, with no cover and $3.50 beers. It's the greatest thing in all of Boston," says one dedicated Ramos fan who flies by and vanishes into the inebriated chaos gathered in front of the tiny stage.

Jose and some form or another of The Special Blend have been playing the Monday night spot for the last six years. "Here at Wally's the appreciation of blues is genuine," says 41-year-old Ramos. "You get every race and color in Wally's—and everybody is cool with that. Inside this place everybody watches out for one another."

The fact that Wally's is so racially integrated is reiterated later on when I talk to Wally's grandson, Frank Poindexter, who helps run the bar nowadays. "Wally's Cafe is a microcosm of the world. We get all kinds of people at Wally's and people have to learn how to get along in that little space."

Only a handful of people sit when the band starts to groove. Most are up shaking their money makers; others chat and high-five as the Celtics beat up on the Philadelphia 76ers again. And there's even one suit and tie, flailing his body around the room like the guy in the Cider Jack commercial. As in the commercial, people keep their distance from him, but everyone—and I do mean everyone—in this particular gin joint bobs his or her head up and down. Swaying back and forth to the rhythm.

Live tunes—jazz, funk, blues and fusion—have infected Wally's since 1947, when the owner, Joseph "Wally" Walcott, an immigrant from Barbados, opened the joint. "My wife (Ethel) and I walked in with a brand new broom and a box of salt back then, that was how we started," Wally proudly tells me, his wide, semi-toothless smile beaming through the frail bone structure of his face. "I can't really remember too much before Wally's," he continues softly, taking his time to search the vast mental files of his 101-year-old mind. "I was hustling around doing different things to try to make myself happy and to make money." Long pause. "Then I realized the key way to make some money was to make other people happy."

Luckily there are some family members who gladly remember the history of this living icon. Says Poindexter, "My grandfather worked in a car garage and then became a cab driver before he opened Wally's Cafe. He opened the club because he saw a need for it around the community. Most of the nightclubs like the High Hat and the Savoy Ballroom didn't let black patrons in back then." At this time Wally was the only black nightclub owner in New England and one of only a few in the whole United States. His friendship with legendary Boston Mayor James Michael Curley didn't hurt. Curley's influence partially enabled Wally Walcott to open the nightclub in the first place.

The good times at Wally's are a little different today in contrast to the early days, though. For one, this is the "new" Wally's. The old version lived across the street until 1978, when Boston's redevelopment program claimed the building Wally owned at 428 Massachusetts Ave. Wally's closed for a year after the takeover, moving just on the other side of Mass Avenue to 427 where it still stands today. "That was the most horrible year and six days we ever ran into," says Elynor Walcott, Wally's daughter. "We bought the building from Thomas J. Neil and his wife who were running a barber shop/salon out of it and he has since had Columbus Square dedicated to him," she goes on to explain, a youthful glow giving her the appearance of a woman half her age. Another thing she can thank her centenarian father for—good genes.

'Yeah, Branford used to come around and play when he was studying at Berklee. All the Marsalis brothers played at Wally's.'

The other major difference between the old and new schools of Wally's is Wally himself. He doesn't come around the place too much anymore. And at his age few expect him to. He spends most of his time in the brownstone on Rutland Avenue he's lived in for more than 50 years. His feet are in bad shape and sitting just next to him I can see him wince in pain as he moves them around.

I stare at Wally and come to a realization that makes me almost dizzy. Wally has seen the coming of the automobile, airplane and any and every form of computer. He's seen both World Wars, Korea and Vietnam. Wally has also seen conflicts of a different nature—racial ones.

Some of the racial barriers in Boston were actually alleviated by Wally himself when he opened the club and lured Harvard University undergrads into the jazz scene by passing fliers around Cambridge—an invitation the students gladly accepted. This integration forced some of Wally's competitors to mirror Walcott and open their doors to everybody and anybody who wanted to come in. A move that came maybe a little too late since most of the competing clubs have since shut their doors forever. "He also booked some great bands with the help of his friend, celebrated New York club owner Ed Smalls, owner of Smalls Paradise," adds Poindexter.

So for Wally Walcott trekking to the bar every night just isn't necessary. Day-to-day operation of Wally's has become a family affair with his daughter, a son and three grandsons running the show these days. "We want to continue running Wally's so we can pass it on to the future generation of our family," Elynor says. "Wally is a historical figure and a legend and we have to continue his legacy."

Speaking of legends...

In Wally's old brownstone I spy a stack of dusty records sitting on an old shelf. His daughter hands half the pile to me and we both start to peruse the collection. Count Basie. Ella. Billie Holliday. At the mention of the latter Wally perks up from a tired slouch he has going in his favorite chair. "She sang at my place...a real in and out kind of gal," he says. His daughter nods her head. I keep going. Sarah Vaughan. Wally looks up and I'm simply amazed at the fact that I shook the hand that shook the hand of Billie Holiday. "A lot of the musicians even stayed right here in this house," Elynor says.

Wally's even has his tendril of influence on one of jazz's most famed contemporary musicians. During the early 1980s a young Branford Marsalis cut his chops at Wally's. "Yeah, Branford used to come around here and play when he was studying at Berklee. In fact all the Marsalis brothers played at Wally's some time or another," Frank says.

For years rumors have been circulating among the dedicated patronage about Wally's actually expanding the cozy, den-sized watering hole into something a little more roomy. Some might be skeptical. Like the public officials who, in 1992, tried to shut Wally's down for safety code violations. But the family is firm in its belief that one day—maybe sometime soon—Wally's Jazz Cafe will be bigger and better than before. "We've been thinking about it for a while now and have been doing some minor work on the building next door that we also own," explains Elynor.

Who knows? Maybe it will happen. Maybe one day I'll walk in and I won't have to hold my breath and suck in my gut just to sneak past the tables. Maybe Wally will stick around long enough to cut the red ribbon. "He's like that watch you know, 'He takes a lickin' but still keeps tickin''," jokes his daughter. But standing wide-eyed and smiling as the tunes pour into my ears I can only doubt that a great time—thanks to Wally Walcott and family—gets any better than this. ✦

Barbara Lynch's Saga

From Southie to Sweetbreads

'I never thought I'd come this far,' says the chef who grew up in the projects.

BY IAN DONNIS

BARBARA LYNCH'S EMBRYONIC RESTAURANT, No. 9 Park, is a labyrinth of tattered plasterboard, dangling wires and tired carpeting—remnants from the previous incarnations of two neighboring storefronts on the short street that slopes away from the front of the State House. But with major renovations yet to occur, Lynch knows in her mind's eye the precise layout for everything the Italian-French eatery will have:

PARK ST.

the elegant dining room overlooking the Common, the more secluded section for quiet tête-à-têtes; the 10-seat bar with a separate menu that will change weekly.

No. 9 Park's opening has been delayed, and Lynch—despite her aplomb in outlining what will go where—says she's a nervous wreck about the transformation that has to happen before its scheduled debut in mid-April. But Lynch, 33, who emerged from a South Boston housing project to garner a reputation as one of America's best young chefs, exudes the quiet confidence of a woman who's ready for the limelight.

Lynch's sense of destiny about No. 9 Park is only enhanced by the fact that she found the location on the same day in January 1997 when she was fired from Galleria Italiana, the Tremont Street restaurant that she largely put on the culinary map, even as it served as her launching pad. "It was ironic that it happened that day, and I found it that day, and it was meant to be," she says.

Smoking a stream of Marlboros and punctuating her words with profane exclamation points, Lynch retains a strong element of her Southie roots, but also talks with savvy about wine, sweetbreads and truffles. "I never thought I'd come this far," she says during a recent interview at Curious Liquids, around the corner from No. 9 Park. "I just thought I'd be cooking."

At Galleria, Lynch conceived dishes such as lobster and potato ravioli with porcini glaze, crispy duck with risotto cake and bread pudding and brandied figs—stuff that was a long way from the spaghetti and meatballs, pot roast and other basic foods of her childhood at the Old Colony project in Southie. Raised by a single mother as the second youngest of eight (Lynch's father, a cabdriver named Phillip "Yapper" Lynch, died a month before she was born), Lynch became interested in cookbooks when she was on the eve of high school. In a fortuitous twist, Boston's tumultuous process of forced busing carried Lynch to Madison Park High School in Roxbury, where her budding interest in cooking caught fire under the tutelage of Susan Logozzo, who doubled as an instructor at the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts.

By her own description, Lynch was a bit of a punk in school and once stole a taxi without getting busted.

Lynch was missing in action when it came to some traditional subjects at school. "English, history—who needed it?" she recalls. But starting with an initial lesson of making eclairs with vanilla custard and then shaping them into swans, Lynch was hooked by the alchemic delight and almost immediate self-gratification of cooking. The experience made such an impression that she quickly bought the ingredients to recreate the lesson at home. "My mother, was like, 'What the Christ are you doing?'" Lynch recalls. "I used to drive her crazy" by, among other things, causing the family refrigerator to bulge open with rising dough.

Moving on a few credits short of graduation from Madison Park (but after repeatedly returning to Logozzo's class), Lynch landed a job with an import-export firm on the waterfront where she worked for six years. The desire to cook professionally ran strong for her, but the cost of culinary school was prohibitive and other approaches for becoming a chef didn't seem apparent. Eventually, though, a kitchen job at a Martha's Vineyard burger joint led to a basic cooking slot aboard a private excursion ship. Lynch then nabbed the chef's job when her predecessor quit suddenly before the ship set out. Against the backdrop of open seas and a tacky Neil Diamond cover band from Florida, she began honing her culinary chops.

After two years Lynch opted out. She returned to South Boston, where her extended family includes Stephen Lynch, now the state senator from Southie. She speaks fondly of her childhood in the neighborhood, recalling poker games on Patterson Way and hanging out at Papa Gino's. By her own description, she was a bit of a punk in school and once stole a taxi without getting busted. But now, a sobering choice loomed: pursue cooking in the intimidating world beyond Southie's confines "or be that South Boston kid who lives for the weekend," who drinks and gets pregnant and married at an early age. Reassured by the seeming practicality of helping to feed the masses, Lynch opted for the former. "So I changed my way," says the chef, who has childhood friends who have since died or landed in prison.

In quick succession, Lynch worked in the kitchen at the St. Botolph Club, moved to the Harvest in Harvard Square, and stayed put only briefly before interviewing in 1987 with Todd English to win a job in the café at Michela's in Cambridge where he worked.

"She was committed, she was very young and she had the fire in her," recalls Michela Larson, who later closed her eponymous restaurant to open Rialto in Harvard Square. "She was working on dishes and playing with stuff and figuring out new ways to do things, and was very concentrated on creating her own signature. My feeling was that she was going somewhere, and it was important to give her the room."

Cooking at the highly popular Michela's represented a whole new challenge for Lynch, and she remained there for four years. "I basically got thrown into it, where I didn't have time to think about it, so I took it and ran with it," she says. "I still don't think about it. I just enjoy it. I don't think of it as a job. I think of it as passion and my life, and pleasing people."

Once a quasi-disinterested student, Lynch supplanted the formal culinary training of most chefs with on-the-job learning, extensive reading about food, history and culture, and her first trip outside the United States, to Italy. She continued her studies by following Todd English to his trend-setting Olives in Charlestown, and worked there and at English's first Figs for about five years. Leaving to try to refine her own style, Lynch was the chef at the now-defunct Rocco's for about a year before being sought out in 1994 by the owners of Galleria Italiana.

A warm 40-seat trattoria on a nondescript stretch of Tremont Street near the theater district, Galleria was opened in 1990 by Marisa Iocco and Rita D'Angelo, natives of Abruzzi. By the time Lynch arrived on the scene, the restaurant offered dinner four nights a week and was doing a brisk breakfast and lunch business. But the serious buzz got going when Lynch and Iocco began collaborating in the kitchen. Lynch may have grown up just a few miles from the restaurant, but Iocco and D'Angelo touted their Irish-American colleague as having the culinary soul of an Italian.

By 1996, Galleria had become not just a dinner destination but one of the hottest restaurants in Boston. Lynch's inventiveness and the synergy among the three women, which included a trip to Iocco and D'Angelo's Italian hometown, generated rapturous reviews. For Lynch, the response was "exciting, overwhelming and unexpected."

It was all the more so when she learned in a letter sent by FedEx that Food & Wine had named her as one of the 10 best young chefs in America. "I thought, you've got to be kidding. That's a joke," recalls Lynch. A writer for the New York-based magazine made a common out-of-towner's geographical mistake, identifying "Boston's tough South End" as Lynch's native neighborhood. But the scribe was dead-on in citing riccioli with caramelized corn sauce as a quintessential Lynch creation. Featuring a handmade pasta that is made by wrapping the dough around large knitting needles, the dish epitomized the simple, yet intense quality that is the hallmark of Italian—and Lynch's—cooking.

Her tenure at Galleria Italiana, Lynch says, "was a great two years of my life, in terms of growing, learning about food costs, sort of taking that as my own little restaurant." She also met her future husband, Charlie Petri, 58, who owns a cold storage company, when he was at the restaurant celebrating a relative's birthday. "When I met him and saw him, I kind of felt I was going to marry him," Lynch says. "I just felt secure with him, and in love with him from the moment I met him."

In January 1997, Lynch gave Iocco and D'Angelo two months notice that she was planning to set out on her own. But all was not peaceful in paradise. Angered by, among other things, a belief that Lynch had overstepped her authority at Galleria, Iocco and D'Angelo fired their star chef in late January when word leaked out about her impending restaurant plan. D'Angelo says Lynch dropped the news at a function where she was representing Galleria. Lynch denies that, and says the details spread through her real estate agent. Regardless of what happened, Lynch and the two women from Abruzzi have not spoken to each other since.

"I totally think they ended it the wrong way," says Lynch. "They just couldn't deal with it."

D'Angelo characterizes the leak about Lynch's plan as the last straw in what had become a fractious relationship. The sore point seemed to be that Lynch's rising fame and dominant personality had eclipsed the co-owners, D'Angelo and Iocco, who felt like the staff considered Lynch the boss, not them. "Maybe it was handled poorly, but I don't know if Barbara's the right person to judge, because there were a lot of things that were handled poorly here," D'Angelo says. "It's really a shame. Maybe we shouldn't have acted a certain way, and maybe she shouldn't have acted a certain way toward us."

The falling-out notwithstanding, both sides emerged with tangible benefits from their time together. Springing off Galleria's enhanced profile, Iocco and D'Angelo last year opened their second restaurant, La Bettola in the South End, to an enthusiastic response. And Lynch came away with the kind of sizzling reputation that led Fleet Bank to give her— despite her lack of financial assets— a loan for her 95-seat restaurant. Delays in the opening have been caused, she says, because she chose to bankroll the restaurant through a smaller group of investors.

And so, Lynch is focused on creating No. 9 Park from the empty adjoining retail spaces that were once filled by a shoe store and the Fil-a-Buster luncheonette. She says she fell in love with the location, housed in a vintage five-story red brick building that speaks of old Boston, and wants to imbue it with 1940s atmosphere and all the elements of a great night out. Toward that end, Lynch's days are filled with meetings with designers, architects and consultants plus appearances before zoning and health boards and dreams about playing around in the expanded realm of such French dishes as foie gras and cassoulet.

Away from work, the Winchester resident's interests include opera, skiing, the family golden retriever, Perrin, and trips to New York City and to farms owned by her husband's family in New Hampshire and Rhode Island. But always, she says, her thoughts return—sometimes in her sleep—to "food, food, food," and opening No. 9 Park.

"I think a lot of people are excited for the restaurant," Lynch says. "It feels right. It feels like this is what I should be doing. I'm still just amazed when someone says, 'I loved your food at Galleria.' All I can do is say a prayer and I hope it's successful."
